At the end of this school year, Hebrew Day School of Ann Arbor will bid farewell to its Head of School, Jennifer Rosenberg, who has been at HDS since 1999. During her time at Hebrew Day, Jen has served as a kindergarten teacher, Principal, and (since 2016) Head of School. Rabbi Will Keller, who currently serves as Director of Jewish Life at the Jack M. Barrack Hebrew Academy in Philadelphia, will take over as Head of School in July.

"Leaving HDS is bittersweet," Rosenberg explained. "I think of the school almost as if it were one of my children. I love it that much. It has provided me with friends and community, and it is my life's work. I have also watched the school grow and change over the years (again, something like what one does with a child), so it's quite difficult to say goodbye. At the same time, I feel optimistic about the school's future. I'm eager to see how Rabbi Keller's vision shapes the school in the years ahead, and I will always be HDS's #1 fan and loudest cheerleader."

As one might imagine, given the duration of her service to the school, Jen has many supporters and cheerleaders of her own. Her influence on Hebrew Day School as an institution, and on its teachers, students, and parents, is both broad and deep. Anna Newman, who was among Jen's second cohort of Gan students (during the 2000–2001 school year) says that she "has only fond memories of kindergarten and HDS." "Jen shaped my early years at the school," Newman said, "I remember how excited we all were to welcome Jen back to school after her son was born, and I remember when she introduced us all to Zero the Hero on the 100th day of school. It turns out Zero was Jen's husband dressed in a super hero costume, but back then, it was all wonder and excitement!"

Richard Primus, who is a parent of one HDS alum and two current students (and was President of the HDS Board of Trustees from 2012–2014) said this of Jen's influence on HDS and his children: "Jen Rosenberg didn't just give my kids a school that 'taught' Jewish values. She gave my kids (and every- one else's) a school that embodied Jewish values. There was a commitment to seeing the good in each person and to leaving the world better than you found it. And maybe most of all, she emphasized the value of community: 'kehilla is a word my kids know well.'

Jen is the primary architect of Hebrew Day's educational philosophy, which is characterized by a commitment to excellence in teaching, differentiated instruction, and a focus on the whole child (which is to say, a focus not only on each child's scholastic needs, but on their social, emotional, and spiritual needs as well). "Everything starts with talented, devoted educators," Rosenberg explained, "and I have been blessed to work with so many over the years. Together with those wonderful teachers, I have tried to build a school culture that is optimistic, rooted in a growth mindset, and infused with the values of collaboration, kindness, perseverance, and community."

Carol Gannon, who is one of only two current HDS teachers with a longer tenure at the school than Jen, reflected on Jen's work: "It has truly been an honor to work, learn, grow, and laugh with Jen," she said. "Every day of her 20-year tenure was spent nurturing and providing guidance to students and staff alike. It is very rare to get the privilege to work with an educator of this caliber. Students, staff, and the HDS community have been forever changed by her leadership."

The ethic of community that so pervades Hebrew Day School took on special significance this year, as teachers, parents, and staff

I couldn't go back to school. So I started a farm to connect with my Jewish values.

Remi Welbel, this article first appeared on Alma.

As the pandemic raged, my twin sister and I were faced with the same daunting decision as so many other college students: return to virtual learning or put our formal education on hold and follow other pursuits.

We chose the latter.

While I am a second-generation American descended from Holocaust survivors on my mother's side, I am a sixth-generation Midwestern farmer on my father's. Growing up in Chicago, car rides and grocery runs were filled with stories of the farm he grew up on and the transition he witnessed from small-scale diversified farming to industrial monoculture agriculture. He would tell me how he dreaded of returning the land to its roots as a perennial farm. Despite his passion, he put his lofty dreams on hold to raise my sisters and myself.

Fast forward to the summer of 2020, and my twin happened to be conducting research on two carbon-sequestering strategies. Biochar, which is largely overlooked by Western science, is an indigenous land stewardship practice that stores carbon for thousands of years and regenerates the soil. Basalt, a type of rock, actively captures carbon from the atmosphere and likewise benefits the soil. One day, as the two of us strolled through our

As I write this in mid-May 2021, Israel/Palestine is experiencing the first large scale violence since I became publisher and editor of the Washtenaw Jewish News over two years ago. I feel a profound responsibility to both represent and inform the community from my heart. I know this is a deeply emotional topic and time, and that there are many triggers to impede communication.

My perspective is that Israel/Palestine is the homeland of the Jewish people, but we have never and will never be the only ones for whom it is home. What I don’t want to do in this moment is well-voiced by Hadar Susskind, President and CEO of Americans for Peace Now, who wrote on May 13, “We will not be silent … and … fall back on the old tribalist approach and demand that people ‘take a side.’ This is not a sporting event, and we are not interested in scoring points for our team or cheering on others as they do so. I will not celebrate the death of others and I will not cheer the destruction of their homes.”

While acknowledging that Jews in Washtenaw County are deeply divided on the ways to achieve peace, if we listen to the concerns of each of us, we may learn something new. Primarily, though, I want to elevate the voices of the Israelis and Palestinians doing the hard and essential grassroots work of building the shared society of the future. If the acute bombing and violence have ebbed by the time this is published on June 1 (please God), these organizations and leaders of Jews and Arabs working for a shared society will still be active.

My friend Batya Kallus lives in Jerusalem and is the Israel Program Director at The Jerusalem Venture Fund for Jewish-Arab Equality and Shared Society. She encourages people who are “Believers and activists in the path of shared society and Jewish Arab partnership” to speak out and “affirm our shared mission of working for equality and shared society and of the necessity for social solidarity. The incitement by the Israeli media is dangerous in the extreme because it is building a larger constituency opposed to the possibility of Jews and Arabs living together. All of it under the reality of rockets falling on our heads. The voices of hatred must not be allowed to win.”

I n 1993, one of my closest childhood friends died from complications related to HIV. We were both 38 and had been friends since 10th grade. My friend had worked for Actors’ Equity, the theater workers’ union, and had been proud to plan some events with the actress Vanessa Redgrave, who as you may remember was outspoken on human rights, including Palestinian human rights. In 1977, the year that she portrayed the anti-fascist julia, for which she won an Academy Award, Redgrave had also narrated the documentary “The Palestinians,” which advocated for a Palestinian state. I returned home to St. Louis for my friend’s shiva, where photos and other memorabilia from his life in the theater were passed around, including an article about the fundraising event he had worked on with Vanessa Redgrave. When I overheard one of his bereaved aunts say, “But aren’t we supposed to hate her?” I was really shook.

That comment, coming at a time when I was emotionally as raw as possible, has stuck with me through the years for what it revealed about the power of Jewish media and communal leaders to shape the opinions of the individual Jews who make up the American Jewish community. How else did this woman know she was supposed to hate Vanessa Redgrave? Our communal leaders had elevated the Jewish far right at the expense of human rights activists. After all, it was the Kahnalist Jewish Defense League who spearheaded the protests against Redgrave.

This just happened
By Samuel Katz
I want to share something that just happened to me.
I was sitting on the New York subway. Today Friday afternoon around 1 p.m. I was reading a book. I had just come from Brooklyn after saying goodbye to my mother after a short visit and heading into the city. The car had the common occupancy that you see now during COVID times, 20-30 people spread apart with space on the benches between those that were seated. On the bench next to mine an elderly homeless man was lying stretched out and sleeping. No sound, no smell, not bothering anyone.

At some point in between stops a man opens the door for the car behind us and enters our car. He is a tall man, bigger than me in every way. He storms past me and goes over to the bench where the homeless man is lying. Aborts the lying man was a window; the man who just stormed in starts smashing on the window above the homeless man. “Get up! Get up! Get out of here! What the fuck is this! Out! Out!” He keeps screaming. Then: “[n word] [n word] [n word]” (The homeless man is black the yelling aggressive man is not)

I look around and no one is saying anything. We are in the tunnel in between stops. No one. So I start yelling at him, “Leave him alone. Leave the man alone. He’s not bothering you.”

He looks up at me steps back from the man, “I get off of work and I have to deal with this. Lying all here. “ He’s shaking and man, “I get off of work and I have to deal with this. Leave him alone. Leave the man alone. “

I breathe a sigh of relief and sadly look around and no one is saying anything. We are still riding under the reality of rockets falling on our heads. The voices of hatred must not be allowed to win. ■

some of the most vulnerable people being dismissed as terrorists, the impossible conditions of their lives dismissed, and seeing my people in their homeland being called colonists, asked to accept rockets as a trade for “being stronger.”

I didn’t post anything about Alshaykh Jarah when it happened, that it enraged me and broke my heart. I didn’t post anything on my socials when rockets hit Ashkelon and Jerusalem, or when my sister, about to move to Jerusalem, had to reconsider her apartment because it doesn’t have a bomb shelter.

I felt guilty and condemned for not doing that. I told myself: Justice is not a performance; it’s what you would actually do when it matters.

Now I ask you, would you have said anything in that subway car? A car underground with no conductor in it and no exit for a while. Would you have stood up for that man sleeping on the bench? Would you have stood up for me? It makes me incredibly sad. I’m still shaken by what happened. There were 30 people in that car.

Addendum:

Ironically the book I was reading and holding in my hands was in German. I got it seven years ago. I had just moved to Germany and I was sitting by the banks of the Lahn River. A German couple (50-60 years old) asked me if they can sit with me at my table along the bank. I still didn’t know German and they didn’t speak English, but between the Yiddish I knew and the few German lessons I had begun, we were able to talk and figure it out. We spoke about history. They told me about their parents’ role in the war and the atrocities and how they reflect on it. It happened between my people and German people. It’ll happen between Israel and Palestine. It’ll happen here in the U.S. It’ll happen in the world.

And that was the book my head was in when it all happened. As I was called a fucking Jew bastard over and over for asking a man to stop harassing a homeless man.

Because despite it all I will always believe in people. I always will. After the horror of the Holocaust, I, a Jew, was able to sit with a German man and woman and talk about our history honestly and feel a human loving kinship. Parting with a gift and true human love.

It happened between my people and German people. It’ll happen between Israel and Palestine. It’ll happen here in the U.S. It’ll happen in the world.

It always can. I will always believe that.

I From Israel

Standing Together
Luna Zilberman Soloway, whose husband Dan grew up in Ann Arbor. The Soloways live in Jerusalem.

My parents brought me to live in Israel when I was only 8 years old. Besides the heat and the palm trees, my first memory is from the first Gulf War in January 1991, when we were woken up every single night and went to the bomb shelter while wearing a gas mask. I grew up in Israel of the nineties. I remember every single bus explosion, but I also remember the joy and the tremendous hope brought to us by the Oslo accords and signing the peace treaty with Jordan.

When the violent second Intifada started, in September of 2000 I was drafted to the Army, and spent the next 3 years of my life fighting the enemy in Gaza and defending my country. Missiles flew above my head and snipers aimed at me daily.

After my military service I moved to Jerusalem, which became my eternal home and unconditional love.

During my academic journey at the Hebrew University, I was fortunate to meet those ‘enemies’ for the first time in my life. They were Arabs, and they were smart, interesting, intelligent, gentle, but the most important thing about them was that they didn’t want to kill me, instead, they very much wanted to be my friends. Those encounters 20 years ago and all the others that followed, changed me. And I thank God about it every single day.

My beloved country is burning from within. This wave of violence and hatred is at a completely different level from what we are used to. My heart is breaking a thousand times a day while listening to the news, and all I can think of is how scared the Jews and the Arabs are from one another, each thinking that they are the enemy of the other. I truly understand, because I remember myself thinking exactly that. Most Jews and Arabs in Israel don’t have the opportunity to meet, because if they did, they would understand that all of us are destined to share this land and live together. It is not going to change, even after this round of violence. And at the end, when it is all over, all of us will still be here and we will need to learn again how to live side by side. Most importantly we will need to look in the eyes of our children and tell them where we were when our country was burning.

So I want to tell you where was I tonight, together with my husband and my children, and together with many hundreds of other parents, grandparents and their children. Jews and Arabs. Young and old. We came together, to meet, and to show one another how sorry we are for the situation on the ground and to testify that we choose to get along and to live together.

Love. Hope. Solidarity. Compassion. Kindness. Generosity. Big hearts. This is what I saw tonight. This is my country. This is my people. These are my Jewish and Arab neighbors. Thank God for all of them.

And since you will not hear about it on the news, I will attach a few pictures of this beautiful evening in Israel, just outside of Jerusalem, where we, Israelis, Jews and Arabs, chose to love one another, because we are all equal human beings and also because we all belong and love this land so very much. ■

A wave of hope

[Editor’s note: Amnon Be’eri Sulitzeanu, CEO of “The Abraham Initiatives,” lives in Tel Aviv and has been publishing commentary that I have found very insightful and informative. Here are his 10 points from May 13, which will hold true on June 3 and beyond.]

1. The current round of violence serves political goals. In Israel — to keep Netanyahu in power by driving a wedge between the Jewish parties of the ‘change block’ and the Arab parties with whom they were negotiating. On the Palestinian side — the war serves Hamas in becoming the de-facto leading political power, following the cancelation of the elections meant to keep Fatah in power. Quid pro quo. We are paying and will continue to the price for years.

2. Recent developments between Jews and Palestinians inside Israel, provide — for those who still need it — a clear picture. Majority-Minority relations are the number one challenge for Israel, now and in the years to come. Those who incited, neglected, humiliated, under-budgeted, marginalized, and legislated against Israel’s Arab-Palestinian citizens have caused huge damage to Israel and the integrity of its society.

3. The massive integration of Arabs into Israeli society and the economy over the past 15 years has created a situation of thousands and thousands of encounter points between people from the two communities. This ‘togetherness’ is a fact on the ground and it’s everywhere: businesses, universities, hospitals, municipalities, shopping and recreation centers, civil society organizations, and many volcanos. Despite day-to-day collaboration and superficial coexistence, Jewish-Arab tension was simmering below the surface all the time. This is why we at The Abraham Initiatives decided three years ago to focus our efforts on mixed towns and regions. We knew that since all of Israel’s cities are becoming mixed, they will set the tone. Those cities need to become the jewels among Israel’s cities as opposed to their current status as its backyard full of poverty, neglect and total absence of law and order.

4. The mobilization of ultra-right Kahanei settlers to invade the mixed cities in order ‘to protect’ the national-religious communities that settled there in recent years in order to Judaize them, is a guaranteed recipe for a quick Balkanization. Those armed people are eager to clash and determined to turn our lives to hell. The police must stop this.

5. In the midst of all this, we are witnessing a wave of hope. We have seen an unprecedented number of small gestures and manifestations of Jewish-Arab partnerships by so many people from so many realms in institutions and places. This is heartwarming.

6. Those expressions of ‘togetherness’ are being ridiculed by many in both societies. I understand the criticism and in normal times agree with it. In less than a week we were taken years back and we need to start rebuilding somewhere. ■
Jews: Stop apologizing!
by Marc Sasselman, Washtenaw County

I was born in 1948, the year Israel was established as an independent state for the Jewish people. I am a faithful Democrat and consider myself to be politically and culturally liberal. But I have been disgruntled seeing unrebutted by Jewish organizations the failure of the media to explain the genesis of the evictions of the Palestinian families from the homes in Sheikh Jarrah, portraying the Israelis as ruthless, brutal, uncaring land-grabbers, evicting rightful owners from their beloved homes, and mercilessly casting them into the street, raising the unsettling specter of the Nazis who dispossessed Jews of their homes and businesses throughout Europe during the Holocaust.

The fact is the Palestinian families are historically illegal squatters who have failed to pay the rent that they agreed to pay in order to live on the property which is legitimately owned by a Jewish Shikim. They have no more right to continue to live in the homes than would a tenant anywhere else. They have a right to continue to live in an apartment s/he has leased, but for which s/he re-fuses to pay the rent.

In resisiting eviction, the Palestinians invoke the pre-1948 falsehood that the Jews stole their land from them, therefore they have a right to stay without paying rent. Have we forgotten how, at the declaration of Israel’s independence, the Arabs living in Palestine rejected the UN’s partition plan which would have created two independent states, one for the Jews, another for the Arabs, who now refer to themselves as Palestinians? That at its genesis Israel was attacked by five Arab nations, with the declared intention of driving the Jews into the sea. Had they succeeded, there would be no Israel today; there would be no Jews living in a Palestinian Palestine. Would the Palestinians have felt any guilt for not only evicting the Jews, but slaughtering them?

Israel has nothing to apologize for. Jews who support Israel have nothing to apologize for. The plight in which Palestinians find themselves is due to no fault other than their own unwillingness to compromise with people of another faith, to share the land with Jews, land which the archeological record indicates — regardless whether one believes or does not believe in the infallibility of the Torah — Jews have inhabited, in varying numbers, from at least 900 B.C.E.: before Islam ever existed, and before any Arabs were living there. They have been a continuous presence in Palestine after the destruction of the Second Temple, throughout the Middle Ages and throughout the 14th through 20th centuries, including during the Ottoman Empire, when most of the land was owned not by Arabs, but by the Sultan. Jewish Americans who support Israel, who support its right to exist in the face of perpetual Palestinian intransigence, have nothing to be apologetic about, nothing to be ashamed of. Jewish Americans, stand up for yourselves, speak out and stop apologizing with your silence.

Editorial note: I received two opinion pieces from two local men this month about Israel/Palestine that signal very different priorities. Alans was written during the buildup to the current violence, and Marc’s during the first week of flare up. I will publish other voices if you are moved to send them to the paper. However, my deepest wish is that with my editorial above and the Israelis I quoted, imperatives for the creation of a culture of peace and non-violence and promoting cultural rapprochement.

Where there is error and wrongdoing, we need a vision of restorative justice, to recognize, heal and make whole the wrongdoers as well as the victims. It is well to remember Malachi’s, “Unless there is a turning of hearts there will come the great destruction.”

The law which restricts foreign aid where human rights violations are involved should alarm the Ann Arbor community generally, and the Jewish community even more so, when respected organizations like Human Rights Watch and B’Tselem issue scathing reports on Israeli behavior, including even the dreaded word “apartheid.”

When our government withdraws from UNESCO, because of criticism of Israel, we lose connection with the source of the policy imperatives for the creation of a culture of peace and non-violence and promoting cultural rapprochement. Palestinian people should know what’s going on to be able to urge Representative Debbie Dingell to support the “No Way to Treat a Child” resolution.

When horrendous, morally unconscionable acts have been done, silence is complicity. Ann Arbor contributes mightily to Israel. U.S. total military aid to Israel is now at $3.9 billion a year. From our 120,700 people (whose income is 1.22 times more than the national average) we contribute about $1,757,000 a year, not counting the money given tax exempt to charitable organizations. We have a big investment in Israel. It is proper to be concerned where our money goes.

For a community conversation on Palestine
By Alain Haber, Eliyahu HaLevi, Ann Arbor

An amazing thing happened at the Ann Arbor City Council meeting on Monday May 3. An Ann Arbor City Council Member said the word “Palestine,” a first time in my long recollections of the City Council.

On my understanding of the word said, a proposal was made that the City Council sponsor a “community conversation” on Palestine and the concerns of Palestinian Americans.

Over the years there have been many “public comment” voices calling for City Council action, responding to one “crisis” or another. Never though, until this May, has a Council Member brought the question to another. Never though, until this May, has a City Council Member said the word “Palestine”.

I am proud that the Jewish community here in Washtenaw County supports an organization that builds bridges between Jewish and Arab Israelis not only in times of crisis, but as a feature of daily life: Hand in Hand Schools.

Hand in Hand Schools builds inclusion and equality between Arab and Jewish citizens of Israel through a network of bilingual, integrated schools and communities. Launched in 1997 with 50 children, Hand in Hand now enrolls over 2,000 students across Israel. Hand in Hand was established to provide education to students residing in the greatest existential threats: the growing social alienation and lack of trust between Jewish and Arab citizens of Israel. They work to address this issue through education.

Hand in Hand schools are public schools, recognized and overseen by the Israeli Ministry of Education, and open to all parts of the Arab and Jewish populations in Israel. In addition to schools, Hand in Hand comprises a thousands-strong adult community. “We believe that it is not right to lay the burden of creating a shared future on the shoulders of our children,” their website explains. “We, the adults, must lead the way.”

Hand in Hand shared what they accomplished in midst of the fighting last month, in an update below from May 12, 2021. In part thanks to the generosity of our community in Washtenaw County, Hand in Hand proves that shared living is possible, real inclusion going throughout Israel right now. You can learn more about the schools at handinhand12.org.

The Hand in Hand students and community members, beyond being Palestinian and Jewish Jerusalemites, also wear another hat – they are a beacon of light that many look to in dark days. On Monday [May 10], after the students created the banner for equality and safety, Engie Wattad, the Vice Principal of the Max Rayne Hand in Hand High School, and Dani Elazar, Hand in Hand CEO, were invited to speak at a special forum in the Knesset to share how bilingual education can be a pillar for building a shared society. The forum, convened by several members of Knesset and Peace Now, included other Knesset members, civil society activists, and representatives from Sheikh Jarrah and Silwan who are under threat of eviction from their homes.

Engie, a veteran Hand in Hand educator, spoke about how Arab and Jewish teachers work together in such a divided city, and how as an Arab she feels unsafe walking around the streets of Jerusalem. Dani described the importance of establishing shared educational institutions for Arabs and Jews in every mixed city, especially in the current reality that is rooted in a deep separation and fear.

The day ended with a gathering of some 40 school principals and educators from around Jerusalem at our Jerusalem high school. Convened at the same time the “flag march” began in the center of Jerusalem, these forward-thinking educators discussed Jewish-Arab reconciliation, equality, and how shared education can help bring these about.

People in Jerusalem, and everywhere in the country, want and need to believe that cooperation and equality between Arabs and Jews is possible. Our students, parents and community members provide tangible reason to believe. May we all emerge from this crisis wiser, more compassionate and ever more committed to equality and safety for all.
2030. The next step for Washtenaw County is to issue a request for proposal (RFP) to complete a carbon neutrality plan. That plan would set a net-neutrality goal for county operations by 2035. The plan would also establish a “path” to becoming a carbon neutral county by 2035. The neutrality plan is to be completed by the end of the year (2021). But the Board of Commissioners will likely vote on the RFP to create this plan in June.

Some definitions may help in understanding what all of this means. A greenhouse gas (GHG) is a gas in our atmosphere that absorbs and emits radiant heat energy. Some of the sun’s heat energy, absorbed by these gases, is radiated in the direction of Earth’s surface. This causes global warming via the greenhouse effect. The primary greenhouse gases in Earth’s atmosphere are water vapor, carbon dioxide (CO2), methane, nitrous oxide, and ozone. Without greenhouse gases, the average temperature of Earth’s surface would be about 60°F cooler, or near 0°F. Thus, we need greenhouse gases to make the world livable. However, since the industrial revolution, which started in the 1700s, we have been largely fueling human activity by burning fossil fuels. This, along with deforestation and other land uses, has increased the level of GHGs in our atmosphere to an unwanted level, causing global warming.

Most scientists agree that global warming is resulting in climate change. Climate change results in warmer temperatures and the increase in ocean levels, flooding, hurricanes, and severe storms. But also, polar vortexes cause extreme cold air to dip south, such as the recent freezing event in Texas. Thus, “climate volatility” may be a more apt phrase for what we are all experiencing.

Greenhouse gas accounting describes the way to inventory and audit GHG emissions. A GHG emissions assessment measures an entity’s carbon footprint by quantifying the total amount of greenhouse gases the entity produces, whether directly or indirectly. The information provides the basis for understanding and managing our climate volatility impacts and may be used to set goals, as some of our businesses and our government entities have done.

Carbon neutrality or “net-zero CO2 emissions” means carbon dioxide emissions and removal of carbon dioxide balance each other out. Generating power using processes that balance emissions of CO2 with removal of this GHG is one way to achieve carbon neutrality. Another alternative to becoming carbon neutral is to eliminate CO2 emissions completely during power generation.

Organizational entity GHG reduction targets should include a definition of what emissions are included in the organization’s tracking, a baseline emissions inventory, and targets years and percent reductions from the baseline. Current goals are usually centered around the year 2030, which is less than nine years away. Most organizations have taken on goals for a step reduction or total reduction by 2030. However, these goals typically include the use of carbon offsets (e.g., non-local energy generators, like wind turbines and solar panels in Texas) and use of CO2 “sinks” (a forest, ocean, or other natural environment which can absorb carbon dioxide from the atmosphere), such as planting of new forests to achieve carbon neutrality. Loftier goals for obtaining carbon neutrality, without the use of carbon offsets and sinks, should also be kept in mind.

There are currently several local commitments:

The City of Ann Arbor has committed to community-wide net carbon neutrality by 2030. This includes plans to:

- Power the electrical grid with 100% renewable energy.
- Switch appliances and vehicles from gasoline, diesel, propane, coal and natural gas to electric.
- Significantly improve the energy efficiency of homes, businesses, schools, places of worship, recreational sites, and government facilities.
- Reduce the miles traveled by at least 50%.
- Change the way materials are used, reused, and disposed of.

University of Michigan President Mark Schlissel has committed to a path to carbon neutrality and his Presidential Commission on Carbon Neutrality has made its final recommendations. However, it has yet to be adopted.

The difficulty with any green energy commitment is that each entity needs to get everyone to be supportive and to take actions, many costing significant resources (time and money) to achieve. It is exceedingly difficult at the community, county, state, and national levels because there are so many independent actors who cannot be ordered to adopt the plan.

Over the coming months and years, the City of Ann Arbor and Washtenaw County, and their 60-plus partner organizations, will work with community members and stakeholders to get the carbon neutrality job done. Together, Washtenaw County can achieve a rapid transition to community-wide carbon neutrality, reduce the risk of climate volatility, and improve the health of both our planet and ourselves.
A culture of belonging

By Marcia Sokenic

"If there be among you a person with needs, you shall not harden your heart, but you shall surely open your hand." (Deuteronomy 15:7)

It is with this principle in mind that the Jewish community’s Belonging Task Force has approached work to promote a more inclusive culture throughout organizations, synagogues, and programs. The original task force was comprised of dedicated volunteers and professionals, including children with special needs, from Jewish Federation, Jewish Family Services (JFS), Jewish Community Center, Hebrew Day School, and Ann Arbor congregations. The initial focus of the Belonging task force was to create a strong sense of belonging for all, to help address the needs of individuals with a variety of learning, development, and mental health challenges. To inform the conversation, identify service gaps, and provide guidance to developing a culture of belonging for all, the Task Force commissioned a needs assessment of the greater Ann Arbor Jewish community. The group consulted with Matan, a national organization which supports Jewish professionals, communities, and families in creating and sustaining inclusive settings in educational, communal, and spiritual aspects of Jewish life, to conduct the assessment.

Matan provided a comprehensive summary of recommendations in the following areas: Community Awareness, Intra-Agency Collaboration and Communication, Program Development, Inter-Agency Collaboration, and Planning and Allocation.

JFS concluded a one-year pilot project funded by the Jewish Women’s Foundation of Metro-Detroit that worked with congregations and community partners towards building a more belonging community. As part of the pilot project, JFS worked closely with an expert consultant to create a manual called “Enhancing Belonging: A Manual for the Greater Ann Arbor Jewish Community.” The manual includes practices and resources to help guide community leaders to create more inclusive communities. Community partners have been involved in learning opportunities and consultations in order to review the guide.

Concurrently, the Jewish Federation of Greater Ann Arbor and Jewish Family Services of Washtenaw County have been working together to synthesize the recommendations set forth by Matan, Federation, and JFS in order to raise new funds which were matched by the Jewish Federations of North America for addressing human service needs in the Jewish community.

Some of these funds will be used to fund a new Community Belonging Navigator position to oversee the rollout of these recommendations. JFS is thrilled to be adding this position to their team and will be seeking applicants who have professional experience working with special needs and/or Jewish communal engagement and programming. Interested candidates should send a cover letter and resume to Jacob at jsinger@jfsannarbor.org.

Simultaneously, planning is being developed to move forward for enhancing the Jewish camp experiences, both at Camp Raanana and Camp Gan Israel. While the pandemic and COVID protocols complicated forward movement for the 2021 summer, the organizations are continuing to work together to offer educational, training, and professional development opportunities so that they are prepared to pilot a Jewish camping experience for all in 2022.

Building a stronger culture of belonging is an important and exciting endeavor in the Jewish community. To find out more about how to be involved, whether as a participant, volunteer, or donor, please contact Jacob Singer, jsinger@jfsannarbor.org, 734-769-0209, ext. 363.

the goal of securing the future for the next generation and generations to come. One way this can be done is through endowment funds, where money grows over time. Shichtman explains, “The intent of the Sandra Shichtman Dabrusin Endowment for Faculty Pedagogy and Research Support in Jewish Studies is to keep Jewish Studies alive at EMU by encouraging innovation and creativity in teaching and scholarship. Because this is an endowment, it will produce, in perpetuity, opportunities for faculty to discover new ways to engage our very deserving students. My sister has been a staunch advocate of Jewish education. I can think of no better way to celebrate her commitment to Jewish life and culture.”

For more information on LIFE & LEGACY, please contact Margaret Schreiber at margaret@jewishannarbor.org or 734-773-3638. She is happy to share the Community Case Statement Booklet electronically or via mail, so that WJN readers can learn more about all the organizations participating in the program. In addition to the EMU CIS, those in the program include the Ann Arbor Orthodox Minyan, Beth Israel Congregation, Chabad House of Ann Arbor, Hebrew Day School of Ann Arbor, Jewish Community Center of Greater Ann Arbor, Jewish Cultural Society, Jewish Family Services of Washtenaw County, Jewish Federation of Greater Ann Arbor, Temple Beth Emeth, and the University of Michigan Hillel.

Federation’s Maimonides Society to present “Israel and the US: Lessons learned and the current challenges with COVID vaccination”

Ezra Brown, special to the WJN

On Sunday, June 13, at 9:30 a.m., the Jewish Federation of Greater Ann Arbor’s Maimonides Society will present a free Zoom program on the vaccine rollout in both the United States and Israel. The event will explore some of the similarities and differences in the ways the two countries have handled the rollout, plus how each has addressed vaccine hesitancy in its population. The featured speakers will be Dr. Bruce Rosen and Dr. Gary Freed.

Rosen is the Systems Research Group leader and Director of the Smokler Center for Health Policy Research, the Myer-JDC-Brookdale Institute (MJB), Israel’s leading center for applied social research. Rosen has worked at MJB since 1986. His primary research areas are mental health policy reform, the public-private mix, and the impact of quality measurement systems and changes in large organizations in the health system. He is highly involved in the promotion of linkage between research and policy, and of international learning. He serves as the co-editor of the Israel Journal of Health Policy Research. Bruce holds a BA in economics from Harvard University, and an MSc and DSc in health policy and management from the Harvard School of Public Health.

Freed is the Percy and Mary Murphy professor of Pediatrics in the School of Medicine and a professor of Health Management and Policy in the School of Public Health at the University of Michigan. He serves as the Director of Faculty Programs in the Office for Health Equity and Inclusion, and Associate Chair in the Department of Pediatrics. Freed was the founding director of the Susan B. Meisler Child Health Evaluation and Research Center at Michigan and also founded the first pediatric health services research unit in Australia. He is a past president of the Society for Pediatric Research, the largest research society in child health. He is past chair of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services National Vaccine Advisory Committee and a fellow of the American Academy of Pediatrics.

The program will include discussions about the keys to a successful vaccine rollout in Israel, some of the difficulties faced with the U.S. rollout, and how vaccine hesitancy is being addressed in both Israel and the U.S.

The Maimonides Society is a professional association connecting Jewish medical professionals in greater Ann Arbor through events and professional networking. Named for Rabbi Moses ben Maimon, also known as Maimonides, the society welcomes physicians, dentists, and other medical professionals. This program is made possible by generous donors to the Jewish Federation’s Annual Community Campaign, which supports vibrant, caring, and sustainable Jewish community in Washtenaw County, Israel, and around the world.

For more information and to register for the event, visit www.jewishannarbor.org or contact Ezra Brown, Jewish Communal Leadership Program (JCLP) intern at the Federation. Ezra can be reached at interns@jewishannarbor.org or (734) 773-3539.

When Hitler Stole Pink Rabbit

Anna Kemper is a nine year old whose family flees Berlin on the eve of Hitler’s election, leaving her beloved pink rabbit toy behind — the first of many changes she faces on the journey to safety.

Five films explore the World War II era, the Holocaust, and its legacy in the next generation:

My Name is Sara

Sara, a 13 year-old Polish Jew, finds refuge employed by a farmer and his wife, but she soon discovers the dark secrets of her employers’ marriage, compelling the greatest secret she must strive to protect, her true identity.

The Sign Painter

This tragicomedy explores World War II era regime changes through a young Latvian sign painter in a small town who is asked to paint over the evidence of each prior regime.

Holy Silence

As World War II looms, Pope Pius XI calls on a humble American priest to help him challenge the evils of Nazism and anti-Semitism, but his death leads his successor, Pope Pius XII, to a very different response.

Winter Journey

Martin Goldsmith from NPR interviews his father, brilliantly played by Bruno Ganz, about his life with his wife, both young Jewish musicians between 1930 and 1941 in Germany.

Thou Shalt Not Hate

A successful surgeon, and son of a Holocaust survivor, confronts a moral dilemma when he comes upon the victim of a car accident and finds a Neo-Nazi swastika tattoo on his chest.

Israel is represented in three films exploring the challenges of Israel’s past, present, and future:

Ma’abarot

Former residents of the Israeli transit camps, established during Israel’s early years and housing hundreds of thousands of new immigrants from different parts of the world, tell their mostly unknown stories of the daily reality of the camps.

Crossings

When adventurous Norwegian siblings, Gerd and Otto, find their parents arrested and Jewish children hidden in their basement, they decide to finish what their parents started and help the children escape.

shared Legacies: The African-American Jewish Civil Rights Alliance

The often forgotten story of the coalition and friendship between the Jewish and African-American communities during the Civil Rights Movement is explored.

Aulcie Perry, an African American from Newark, NJ, who was recruited by Maccabi Tel Aviv to become a basketball legend and a national hero in Israel. The festival features two films which provide family-friendly explorations of the Holocaust from the perspective of youth:

The Crossing

When adventurous Norwegian siblings, Gerd and Otto, find their parents arrested and Jewish children hidden in their basement, they decide to finish what their parents started and help the children escape.

Three films explore the intersections of history, culture, identity, and creative expression thorough those who create that art, food, and music:

Breaking Bread

Dr. Nof Atamna-Ismael, the first Muslim Arab to win Israel’s MasterChef, is on a quest to make social change through food.

Soul Exodus

Five klezmer musicians trace their ethnic roots and explore their beliefs.

Ottolenghi and the Cakes of Versailles

Renowned chef, Yotam Ottolenghi, is commissioned to bring the sumptuous art and decadence of Versailles to life in cake form for the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

Maverick Modigliani

Narrated from the point of view of his young common-law wife, explore the short, tumultuous, unconventional life of Amedeo Modigliani, the famous Italian Jewish sculptor and painter.

Tamar Manasseh, a Black rabbinical student, leads the fight against gun violence on the south side of Chicago.

Pierluigi Erbaggio curates Jewish film shorts

Clara Silver, special to the Washtenaw Jewish News

Interview conducted by Linda Benson and Thea Glicksman

Pierluigi Erbaggio, an avid film aficionado and curator of short films and the children's pro-program for Detroit presentations of the Italian Film Festival USA for the past five years, has shared his expertise with the Ann Arbor Jewish Film Festival and has selected the short films for the 2021 Summer of Film that begins on May 22, 2021. Erbaggio resides in Bloomfield Hills and was born in Torre del Greco, Italy, a town on the Mediterranean Sea in the province of Napoli. Currently, he serves as Administrative Assistant for the Consulate of Italy in Detroit where he works on legal matters and cultural programming. He and Thea Glicksman, a Film Festival committee member, bonded over their mutual appreciation for films of different cultures, genres, and themes. Glicksman and fellow committee member, Linda Benson, interviewed Erbaggio about his experience in the world of international films and his interest in supporting the Ann Arbor Jewish Film Festival.

Pierluigi Erbaggio

Linda Benson and Thea Glicksman: Did you ever think you would live in the United States and how did you get to Michigan?

Pierluigi Erbaggio: I never imagined that I would end up in the United States. Growing up, I studied French in school and pursued a University degree in French language and literature. My first experiences abroad were in France, where I worked as an Italian teaching assistant for a few years after college. In 2003, while in Aix-en-Provence, in Southern France, I met my wife, a student from the University of Michigan who was studying French at a local university. In 2006, I moved to Michigan and in 2008 we were married.

Linda Benson and Thea Glicksman: When did your interest in films begin?

PE: Cinema was always part of my life growing up. My father in particular loved watching films and was an avid moviegoer when he was younger. When I was a child, I remember him often telling stories about his move theaters that were available in my hometown during his youth, compared to the one theater still surviving today and at the time. As a teenager and during college, along with my brother, we put together a large collection of VHS tapes, often recording television broadcasts of international films.

My passion for cinema, however, became a subject of study as I pursued graduate studies at Wayne State University first, and at the University of Michigan later. I completed a graduate certificate in film studies at U of M while working on my PhD in Italian. I also had the opportunity to teach cinema in both the Screen Arts and Cultures and the Romance Languages and Literatures Departments.

Linda Benson and Thea Glicksman: Did you watch short films throughout your life?

PE: I developed an interest in Italian short films as my involvement with the organization of the Italian Film Festival USA increased. The Italian Film Festival USA screens Italian contemporary films in 14 U.S. metropolitan areas, including Metro Detroit. In 2017, I started curating a program of short films attracted by the variety of genres, themes, and settings such a program could provide. In short films, often directed by young, new directors, I also enjoy the fresh and concise perspective they offer. This year, I welcomed the opportunity to collaborate with the Ann Arbor Jewish Film Festival to expand my knowledge of this international genre.

Linda Benson and Thea Glicksman: How many short films did you watch to narrow down the field to what the festival committee ultimately chose to include?

PE: For the selection of 13 shorts, divided in the two programs on our schedule, I watched and read about 75 to 80 short films with Jewish subject matter or by Jewish directors.

Linda Benson and Thea Glicksman: What impressed you the most about the quality and number of available short films of Jewish subject matter?

PE: The quality of the short films available is very high, [and that] reflected in the selection that will be offered through the Ann Arbor Jewish Film Festival. Within a short period of time, we were able to put together two programs of innovative and captivating works. The ones that were not selected, for the most part, were titles that did not fit with the programming goals of offering a wide variety of stories, genres, and Jewish-related subject matters.

Linda Benson and Thea Glicksman: Were you surprised by the quality of short films?

PE: I was not. I expected that there are short films about topics that metaphorically bring me to a variety of countries, I was astonished to be able to find valid titles from so many different parts of the world. As a result, in addition to short films from the United States and Israel, the two short programs have works from Italy, France, the United Kingdom, Ukraine, and Russia.

Also, as I worked on Ellie Wiesel's "Night" for my college thesis in Italy, I was attracted by films related to the Holocaust. The variety of ways in which the short films selected and [others] I watched [that were not selected] tackle this topic is truly amazing and al-owed me to learn even more about how that topic affected the lives of generations of Jewish people.

Finally, through these short films I was able to better understand what being Jewish today means, especially with those shorts that focus on universal themes such as soli-derity, love, or mourning.

The Ann Arbor Jewish Film Festival, in its 20th year, will offer 20 full length films and two programs of multiple short films, one in the narrative genre and one in the documentary genre, as well as additional conversations and programs about the films. All screenings will be online via the Michigan Theater's website, michiganthereal.org/virtual. The full schedule is available at film.jccannarbor.org.

The Ann Arbor Jewish Film Festival is supported by generous donations from the community. Those wishing to continue the success of the festival are encouraged to visit the "Become a Sponsor" page on the festival's website to find out more about these opportunities to give.

Festival film selections and other events are also listed on the website, film.jccannarbor.org.

Here are the first 10 Jewish documentaries funded through Jewish Story Partners

Gabe Friedman, originally for the JTA

he Jewish Story Partners foundation, which Steven Spielberg and wife Kate Capshaw helped found to fund Jewish-themed documentary films, announced its first slate of grantees on Wednesday.

The 10 projects received a total of $255,000 from Jewish Story Partners, which has received its initial funding from Spielberg's Righteous Persons Foundation, the Maimonides Fund and the Jim Joseph Foundation.

Here are the films, first reported by Dead-

"Coexistence My Ass!" – Directed by Amber Fares

The film follows Israeli comedian Noam Shuster, who is bent on using her standup line:

"COEXISTENCE MY ASS, " Can comedy solve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict? Noam Shuster thinks it's worth a try. An Israeli comedian who embodies many of the hard look at the racial tensions in the Chicago community in which they grew up. As an international movement against racism takes shape, Noam realizes now is the time to take her global ambitions home, and push her Jewish compatriots to examine their own racism – one joke at a time.

"South Commons" – Directed by Joey Soloway

The Jewish creator of “Transparent” takes a hard look at the racial tensions in the Chicago community in which they grew up.

"Untitled Spiritual Care Documentary" – Directed by Luke Lorenzo

Mount Sinai hospitals in New York appoint interfaith chaplain residents each year — this film follows four of them.

"The Wild One" – Directed by Tessa Louise Salomé

It's the story of Jack Garfein, an Auschwitz survivor who went on to play a key role in the Actors' Studio group and taught the craft to some of the last century's biggest stars.

"Heroes" – Directed by Avishai Mekonen and Shari Rothlarb Mekonen

The tale of a group of Ethiopian-Jewish activists who fought to keep their community alive in the 1970s to 1990s, a time of harsh dictatorship.

"Joyva" – Directed by Josh Freund and Sam Radatzky

The 100-plus-year-old Joyva company is among the most recognized Jewish-American candy companies, whose delicacies often end up at holiday celebrations such as Passover. The film focuses on the founder's great-grandchildren, who are fighting to keep the business alive.

"Walk With Me" – Directed by Heidi Levitt

Levitt tracks her husband's battle with early-onset Alzheimer's disease.

Religious diversity in the ancient Mediterranean
Kelsey Robinette Keeves, special to the WJN

In the upcoming year, the Frankel Institute for Advanced Judaic Studies will focus on the theme of “Second Temple Judaism: The Challenge of Diversity.” Diversity of ethnicity, religion, social status, gender, age, and ability was as much a feature of the ancient Mediterranean world as it is in the present. Under the leadership of head fellow and U-M Professor of Middle East Studies and Judaic Studies, Gabriele Boccaccini, thirteen scholars from four countries will explore various aspects of religious, cultural, and political life during the period dating from the age of the Persian King Cyrus in the sixth-century BCE up to the Bar Kokhba Revolt in the second century of the Common Era.

The modern notion of Second Temple Judaism was originally shaped by Christian scholars who imagined it as the “intertestamental” period between the Old and the New Testaments, or as the “age of Jesus.” Jewish scholars were originally uncomfortable with this periodization, only gradually accepting the notion that a significant transformation in Judaism also occurred between the “Biblical” and “Rabbinic” eras, or “from the Bible to the Mishnah.” Second Temple Judaism, however, is much more than just a combination of “proto-Rabbinic” and “proto-Christian” traditions. Rather, it was the seedbed for multiple distinctive world-views. The central texts of the period include the New Testament, the works of Josephus, the Dead Sea Scrolls, and the rich literature of Hellenistic Judaism, all of which can be studied together with archaeological finds to reveal new perspectives on this landmark era in Abrahamic traditions.

The fellows will share their scholarship via several events taking place throughout the year, organized in collaboration with the Enosh Seminar. On September 30, Gabriele Boccaccini will give an online presentation about his book on Paul as a Second Temple Jew, featuring Lisa Bowen (Princeton Theological Seminary), Isaac Oliver (Bradley University), Matthew Novenson (University of Edinburgh), Cecilia Wasser (Uppsala University), and Emma Wasserman (Rutgers University). On October 25–27, the Frankel Institute will host fellows, as well as other international scholars, for an online conference: “Was Paul an Apocalyptic Jew? A Case in Jewish Diversity in the Second Temple Period.” On January 10–13, 2022, a second online conference, “Studies in Second Temple Judaism: A Global Enterprise,” will feature fellows and international scholars. There will also be an in-person workshop featuring Amy-Jill Levine (Vanderbilt University) and John Collins (Yale University) on April 12–14, 2022. All events are free and open to the public.

The Frankel Institute aims to develop fruitful conversation about ancient Jewish diversity. Through the study of literature, sacred texts, art, and material objects, the fellows will study an array of related topics including temple architecture, the meaning of sacrifice, the nature of ancient leadership, and circumcision. By bringing together a group of international scholars who approach the material from different perspectives in an interdisciplinary and inclusive fashion, the Frankel Institute seeks to contribute to our understanding of the vibrant diversity of Second Temple Judaism and redefine its place within Jewish Studies. The 2021–22 Frankel fellows and their fields of research are:

- Oren Ableman, Israel Antiquities Authority, “Resistance to Rome in Late Second Temple Jewish Literature”
- Gabriele Boccaccini, University of Michigan, “Christian and Rabbinic Origins: An Intellectual History, from Daniel to the Mishnah”
- Catherine Bonesho, University of California, Los Angeles, “Kings, Queens, and Caesars: Gentile Rulers in Early Jewish Literature”
- Rodney Caruthers, Gustavus Adolphus College, “Judaism and its Practice Beyond Ethiopian Rivers”
- Kelley Bautch Coblentz, St. Edward’s University, “Recovering Diverse Voices in 1 Maccabees”
- Gregg Gardner, University of British Columbia, “The Archaeology of Diversity in Rural Palestine During the Second Temple Era”
- Michael Langlois, University of Strasbourg, “Pseudepigraphy Between Canonical and Non-Canonical Literature”
- Mark Lechtem, Temple University, “Scholarly Refractions of Imperial Myth in Jewish Texts of the Persian Period”
- Shayna Sheinfeld, Sheffield University, “Diversity in Jewish Leadership in the First and Second Centuries CE”

JCLP’s tenth graduating class reflects on trials, triumphs
Paige Walker, special to the WJN

Every first Sunday in May, the community comes together to celebrate and acknowledge the accomplishments of the graduating students of the Jewish Communal Leadership Program (JCLP) at the University of Michigan. This year was no different and for the second time in a row, JCLP’s graduation celebration took place over Zoom. It’s strange to think that COVID restrictions and quarantine lifestyle changes have been in place for more than a year. It’s not strange, however, to the JCLP Class of 2021—who only got to experience graduate school in-person for about 20 weeks instead of 20 months. How fitting it is, though, that this exceptionally resilient and creative class found a way to bring the sense of joy and intimate community that is a staple of the in-person graduations to the virtual ceremony.

In their community wide programs I’ve always felt pushed to take in other perspectives, hear ideas, ask complicated questions and lean into dialogue. These might be the skills I’ll cherish the most from my time here.

While their time in JCLP was certainly unprecedented, the graduates are leaving, as others have done before, with passion in their hearts and a fire in their bellies to transform the world to a more just place. As Forrest ended her speech, “We’re living in incredibly polarized times. How often do we sit in spaces where we can critically engage with ideas, challenge the voices around us, find difference with eloquence and respect, and leave as closer friends than when we arrived? I would say, not very often. So thanks for being the difference in my world, and here’s to being the difference in someone else.”

Graduate Kayla Kapen ‘21 reflected on one of the most important lessons she learned while in the program, “I’ve learned over these past twenty months that the point of having a difficult conversation is not to conclude with an answer. The point is to learn and gain new perspectives … I have come to appreciate listening to views that contradict mine which has happened since day 1. As the great Dr. Susie Tanchel told us, ‘people learn best when they are a little uncomfortable.’ I have said from the beginning that I came to grad school to be challenged and I’m happy to say that that goal has been achieved.”
Passport to Shabbat: A national collaborative

Amanda Glucklich, special to the WJN

Get your virtual passports ready to travel to Shanghai (June), South Africa (July), and Greece (August)! Passport to Shabbat is a joint collaboration of synagogue engagement directors from across the country to bring Jewish communities a variety of fun, new, and meaningful programming.

For Amanda Glucklich, Engagement and Programs Director at Beth Israel Congregation, working on the collaborative summer programming was a blend of relationship-building, camaraderie, and the desire to bring exciting programs to the communities that we may not have been able to do in person. "We are all looking for ways to continue to nurture our communities, and it’s been challenging to keep it up over the last year. Putting this summer’s programs together as a group made us much stronger than had we been able to increase their international cooking perspectives and experience to the table, we have curated a truly whimsical, fun, and engaging summer of programming for our communities."

"Joint programming for this summer will certainly not be the end of the group's interactions with one another. It's a collective goal for this group to continue to work together, to share creative ideas and things that ‘work’ in each of the communities."

In addition to BIC, the other participating United Synagogue of Conservative Judaism programming professionals and their congregations include: Dr. Andrea Beck, Director of Engagement at Beth Torah Benny Rok Campus, North Miami Beach, Florida; Robby Erlich, Engagement Coordinator at Beth El Synagogue, Omaha, Nebraska; and Jenna Hyland, Programs & Membership Director at Beth El Synagogue, Durham, North Carolina.

"Sign up today for the many programs being offered this summer at https://www.bethisrael-aa.org/form/passportoshabbat. For more information, you can contact Amanda Glucklich at engage@bethisrael-aa.org."

The year of building
By Devon Meier

What do you see when you drive by 2245 South State Street in Ann Arbor? Perhaps you see a standard, three-story, tan office building. It looks solidly built with a strong foundation. Some call that "good bones." Those who know us at Jewish Family Services of Washtenaw County (JFS) see it as a place of possibilities.

Rooted in Jewish values, JFS started serving the community in 1993 in less than 200 square feet. During the past two decades, the agency expanded services and needed more space to meet growing and urgent community demand.

In December 2019, JFS fulfilled a lifelong dream of securing a permanent home for its mission of creating solutions, promoting dignity, and inspiring humanity. In January 2020, JFS hosted a meaningful ceremony to affix a mezuzah to the doorpost as a sign of faith in all the good work to come. Then, the pandemic hit.

During this last year, it became more apparent than ever that we truly needed our increased space. The number of people relying on the agency for critical services increased dramatically. The JFS Nutrition Services program (which includes a Speciality Food Pantry, as well as prepared meals) more than quadrupled its operations. Had we not owned the building, it would have been nearly impossible to meet this unprecedented demand. In fact, nearly every corner of the building became involved in some way with hunger prevention. While many JFS programs transitioned to virtual, the building remained open throughout the pandemic as a hub for critical in-person services. As JFS staff and hundreds of JFS volunteers know, some work is too essential to shut down.

As we all — with cautious optimism — begin to re-engage and (for some) rebuild our lives, we are looking to the future. In spite of setbacks caused by the pandemic, we continue to plan and dream for what services and programs emanating from the building we can offer to the community.

To that end, JFS is thrilled to announce The Year of Building. We look to celebrate the building — and those who helped make it our permanent home — but it’s not just about the bricks and mortar. It’s about what happens inside. It’s about Jen, who can make personal food choices and be served with dignity by JFS Nutrition Services; about Steve, who is learning new ways to maintain and improve his mental health; about Ben, who meets with his case manager for help navigating his senior health needs; about the family from Yemen that arrives to start anew; about the students who celebrate graduation from their ESL class; about the volunteers who help package prepared groceries and other supplies to deliver to older adults; about the Holocaust survivors who meet to share a meal and spend time together; and about Ana, who is taking the next step toward owning her own bakery.

We plan to host several events to highlight capacity-building projects — such as our new kitchen space and refugee resettlement services suite — and the ongoing vision of protecting our future to sustain and expand services for anyone and everyone in Washtenaw County. On October 3, we will host an outdoor event, “Walk a Mile in My Shoes.” On October 17, we will host a virtual version of Dining with the Family, with a focus on food insecurity and how we are working to ensure no one ever goes hungry. The Year of Building will culminate in a gala event on June 12, 2022. The event will feature and celebrate recipients of the Bernstein and Amster awards.

Bernstein Award: Mark Berg and Fran Lewy Berg

Mark Berg has been a guiding force in the development of JFS. To describe his commitment to the agency as devoted, dedicated, and dogged is an understatement. He began his JFS journey in 2000 as a member of the Federation Board, assigned to serve on the JFS Advisory Council. This group of amazing volunteers created the strong foundation for JFS to launch its independence as a 501(c)(3) organization and grow into the agency we know today. Mark created and oiled the working engines of technology to identify, create, and adapt software programs to enable all the detailed work of tracking clients and measuring impact of programs and services.

In addition, he was a leader in the agency’s move to its current location, with negotiating the lease being just one of the responsibilities he managed. Mark helped to analyze space needs and plan the allocation of space. He also physically helped with build-outs of the new space, he was not shy about being on a ladder or wielding a hammer.

As our footprint in the building grew, Mark’s contributions did not end there. Mark has served as the steward of space for JFS during the past two decades. As community needs and services significantly increased, the rented space at 2245 South State Street became too small. Mark initiated and led a long and time-intensive effort to work with McKinley Co., the building owner, and potential community investors, which resulted in JFS being able to buy the building and thus expand into a much-needed, larger space. Mark saw the need and devoted himself to making it happen, a milestone event in the history of the agency.

It is simple to relate Mark’s achievements and contributions in words, but the endless hours of time and concentrated effort to make all these things happen are daunting to calculate. Mark and Fran’s extraordinary support of JFS exemplifies the Bernstein award. They have improved the infrastructure of the agency beyond measure. Their contributions have radiated outward through community services and resources.

Amster Award: JFS Building Lenders and Donors

It took 26 years for JFS to finally come home. For that to happen, many stars had to align. One of the key reasons was the community support from a group of 21 generous lenders and donors. In response to the call to action to help JFS secure a permanent home, community members seeded the down payment with their multi-year investments. The sudden opportunity did not allow for a regular fundraising process. Without this incredible group of people, 2245 South State Street wouldn’t be our home. We look forward to sharing more about these amazing lenders in a future publication.

The work of JFS and the acquisition of our home are beautiful examples of what volunteers and community can do together to make a dream become a reality. They demonstrate the deep impact each person can make, brick by brick, when we all contribute to the well-being of the whole.
World Refugee Day 2021 at JFS: Celebrating refugee arts and culture

Amanda Fahim, special to the WJN

World Refugee Day is observed annually throughout the world and will be commemorated this year on June 20. The day is dedicated to raising awareness about the contributions of refugees throughout the world. Since mid-2020, an estimated 80 million people worldwide have been forcibly displaced. Of those, 45.7 million were displaced internally, 26.3 million were refugees, and 4.2 million were seeking asylum. Notably, an estimated 30 to 34 million (38 to 43 percent) of those who were forcibly displaced were children under the age of 18, according to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

On May 3 the Biden administration announced it would be raising the cap on refugee admissions to 62,500 for the 2021 fiscal year, more than quadrupling the 15,000 limit set by the previous administration. Increasing the cap for fiscal year 2021 admissions is reinforcing administration efforts to expand capacity. Capacity expansion efforts are expected to enable the U.S. to welcome even more refugees in fiscal year 2022, as much as doubling the fiscal year 2021 number again.

Jewish Family Services (JFS) of Washtenaw County, Inc., is a nonprofit social service agency offering a broad array of safety net human services to the county’s most vulnerable residents in pursuit of the agency’s mission to create solutions, promote dignity, and inspire humanity. Established in 1993, JFS is the only certified refugee resettlement agency in Washtenaw County. For 28 years, JFS has worked to promote the successful integration and inclusion of refugees and other immigrants in the local community.

For 2021, JFS has worked to promote the successful integration and inclusion of refugees and other community members, supporting their endeavors to share their skills and talents through the launch of small businesses. The JFS microenterprise development (MED) program units a community of refugee artists including jewelry makers, dancers, fabric makers, culinary artists, and painters. JFS assists these entrepreneurs in sharing their skills and products with the community through the JFS-Made brand.

In this spirit of unity, JFS will be honoring World Refugee Day in 2021 by celebrating refugee contributions to the arts, made possible in part through the support of the Michigan Council for Arts and Cultural Affairs (MCACA) and the Arts Alliance. The support of MCACA and the Arts Alliance for this event is just one of many examples of the entities’ vital impact on the vibrancy of life in the region, including through shared opportunities to celebrate diverse expressions of arts and culture. JFS will host virtual cooking demonstrations of foods from around the world and will provide a digital cookbook highlighting the recipes of refugees and immigrants. In addition, the event will feature virtual performances and virtually showcase a tapestry of fabric squares made by JFS clients. Each square will highlight the distinctive arts, culture, and history of a client’s place of origin. Greeting cards will be available for purchase; each card will feature an image of the tapestry and more information about the tapestry’s creators.

Everyone is invited to attend World Refugee Day virtual events through JFS on June 20, as well to visit JFSMade vendor booths at the Ypsilanti Farmers Market every Saturday (9 a.m.–1 p.m.) through October. Each Saturday, a different JFSMade vendor makes products available for purchase at the market. Some are the products of refugee-owned businesses in the MED program; others are products offered by non-refugee clients who received grants or low-interest loans from JFS for their businesses. Selling products at the JFSMade market booth gives vendors the opportunity to promote their business and connect with members of the Washtenaw County community. The work of JFSMade is made possible in part through the generous support of grants from HIAS, the Ann Arbor Area Community Foundation, Citizens Bank, and others.

For more information about the JFS World Refugee Day celebration, please visit the website at www.jfsannarbor.org, and to learn more about JFSMade products available on Saturdays at the Ypsilanti Farmers Market, please visit www.jfsannarbor.org/jfs-made.

Inclusivity and Pride at AARC

By Gillian Jackson

during the recent period of isolation due to COVID-19, many of us experienced a feeling of being ‘at sea’ or alone at times. The Reconstructing Judaism website provides a reassuring image of our Jewish community as a ship for those at sea, offering us a safe refuge during trying times. Reconstructing Judaism strives to build a broad and welcoming ship, with a place in it for everyone. The Ann Arbor Reconstructionist Congregation has long focused on an expanding vision of inclusivity, working to change the culture of our congregation. A culture of radical inclusivity strives to lift up and center those seeking a Jewish home whose background, disabilities, sexual or gender orientation, age, race, or class have been barriers to full participation in Jewish life.

This mission has manifested in many ways. We have changed our bylaws and congregational documents to be gender neutral and inclusive. We have added signage on our website and physical spaces indicating we are a LGBTQ safe zone. We have made it a priority that our gatherings are handicap accessible. Our leadership has engaged in learning through Reshet, a LBGTQ advocacy organization, to teach us how to implement these practices in as many ways as possible. Pride month is a special time of year when we get to celebrate and honor members of the LGBTQ community. During June AARC has a Pride Shabbat service that is planned and implemented by the LGBTQ community. Please join us for Zoom Pride Shabbat on Saturday June 12 at 10 a.m. For the Zoom link please email aarcgillian@gmail.com. We look forward to meeting you and sailing the sea of welcoming and inclusion together!

Miriam Saperstein receives the Frankel Center’s outstanding undergraduate award

every spring the Frankel Center for Judaic Studies honors a graduate by presenting them with the Outstanding Undergraduate Student Award. This year’s recipient is Miriam Saperstein, from Huntington Woods, Michigan. In addition to majoring in Judaic studies, Saperstein also minored in creative writing. “This award really is a reflection of my excellent professors who helped me take on challenges both academic and personal during my time in undergrad,” they commented. “It’s as much a testament to their teaching as it is to my learning.”

Faculty nominate students who have made standout academic achievements and have achieved a grade point average of at least 3.8 in Judaic studies courses. Professor Devi Mays noted that Saperstein was one of the most impressive students she has had the pleasure of teaching. “They are a thoughtful and astute writer, researcher, and thinker, whose classroom contributions propelled discussion forward and encouraged other students to think more deeply about entrenched historical narratives,” said Mays. “In their writings, they exhibited deep intellectual curiosity as they delved deeply into an array of scholarship to craft nuanced, provocative, and well-supported analyses. Not only did they excel in all required areas of the course, but they regularly brought materials that were unknown to me that connected to class themes but were not related to Jewish history, whether bringing Yiddish poetry and music to my attention, or graphic novels recounting the experiences of immigrants to the United States.”

“Miriam Saperstein brought unique humor and creativity in class. They embraced roleplaying and improvisation and I witnessed how they brought many other people to study Yiddish through their charisma and cultural work,” commented Yiddish lecturer Elena Luchina.

Professor Bryan Roby also commented that Saperstein was a great addition to class and a driver of discussions. After graduation, they plan on working with the U-M history department on Michigan in the World, an internship program where students, in partnership with the Bentley Historical Library and the College of Literature, Science and the Arts, develop online public exhibitions of research about the history of U-M and its relationships with the wider world.

Saperstein then plans on attending Wayne State University’s Masters in Library and Information Science program. “My professors in Judaic studies were compassionate, engaging, and very knowledgeable," said Saperstein.

Hebrew Day School says goodbye to beloved Head of School banded together to keep the school open despite the risks associated with the COVID-19 pandemic. Early in the school year, Jen introduced Hebrew Day School families to the concept of a brit, which is Hebrew for “covenant.” She invited and encouraged families to join her and Hebrew Day School faculty and staff in a covenant focused on risk mitigation and preserving both personal and public health. This meant rigorous adherence to mask-wearing and physical distancing protocols while in school, and an equally zealous commitment to avoiding unnecessary risks outside of school. The brit proved fabulously successful. Save for a brief period around the Thanksgiving break, during which instruction was fully remote, Hebrew Day has provided in-person instruction throughout this tumultuous year.

“Jen has brought us through an unprecedented year with her commitment to in-person learning and meticulous attention to safety,” said Marie-Adele Kress, who is a parent of two HDS students. “HDS has grown stronger because of her visionary leadership. We will all miss her greatly, but she leaves us with cause to be excited about what lies ahead for HDS.”

Part of what lies ahead for Hebrew Day School is sharply increased enrollment, especially in the younger grades. When the school opens in September, it will welcome more than 70 students, which will constitute its highest enrollment since 2013. “I’m so proud of the work we have done to ensure that our doors stay open this year,” Jen said, “and I’m delighted that more and more families are choosing HDS for their children.”

“Above all else,” Jen remarked, “I’m filled with gratitude. I’m grateful to the teachers who have given so much of themselves to our work, to the parents who have trusted us with their children’s education, to the community leaders who have offered their support and good counsel over the years, and of course to the children — who bring wonder, an eagerness to learn, and a readiness to love to this building every day. It has been a privilege to lead this school.”
Editor’s Note: In January, Chuck Newman began hosting a bi-weekly series of “Conversations,” presented by the Jewish Cultural Arts and Education department of the Jewish Community Center of Greater Ann Arbor. The talk show format of the Zoom presentations highlight Chuck’s easygoing style and deep curiosity about science, politics, and connections between our local environment and the world. I’ve asked Chuck for a monthly column based on the Conversations series.

Thomas Zurbuchen, the associate administrator for the Science Mission Directorate at NASA, describes how he is different from the people he grew up with by telling the story of a flock of sheep in an enclosed pasture. Most of the sheep were lazing around the well, but one was exploring the fence looking for a way out. This was not because he wanted to escape, but rather he needed to know what else was out there. Zurbuchen would have been that sheep. This hunger to know has taken him from a village on the side of a mountain in Switzerland to the pinnacle of attempts to answer some of humanity’s biggest questions: Where did we come from? Are we alone? How does the universe work? Zurbuchen is well versed in the practice of asking difficult questions that help us seek interconnected answers leading to real world impacts. He is also keenly interested in innovation, how leadership is developed, and how the pursuit of excellence can help change the world.

Like many immigrants, Zurbuchen has made enormous contributions to America as an inspiring teacher and a catalyst for change. He taught at the University of Michigan from 1996 to 2016 where he was a professor of Space Science and Aerospace Engineering and was described as a “force of nature” and founded the Center for Entrepreneurship at the College of Engineering. He also founded Innovate Blue, a campus-wide entrepreneurship and innovation effort.

At a time when many think America has lost its way, we are still admired for our leadership in space exploration, as evidenced by the video of the recent Mars landing having been viewed 1.5 billion times. This is due in no small part to Zurbuchen’s leadership and diplomatic skills, which may be needed more than ever now that China is starting to build a Space Station with ambitions to recruit other countries to join them while excluding the United States.

When Zurbuchen was four he taught himself to read by following along with bible readings. Despite being precocious, he was not encouraged to go to gymnasium, much less college, until he was given a survey in the sixth grade at his public school to determine what sort of profession he was suited for. The recommendation was that he become a scientist or engineer. Zurbuchen didn’t know any scientists or engineers; he didn’t even know what they did. Today he is a huge advocate of public schools because of the difference they made in his life. This appreciation of public schools is the reason he chose to teach at the University of Michigan over other attractive offers from private schools.

Recently, Zurbuchen has become interested in personally traveling into space. Perhaps that will become possible for all of us soon and we can hear what SpaceX mission control said to the crew of Dragon Resilience, “We welcome you back to planet Earth and thanks for flying SpaceX. For those of you enrolled in our frequent flyer program, you’ve earned 68 million miles on this voyage.”

My Conversations talk with Zurbuchen, where we more fully explored his life story and NASA’s plans, can be viewed at: https://jccannarbor.org/event/conversations.

Looking for Rose: Neighbors in the cemetery

Clare Kinberg, 18th installment of a series

My Aunt Rose, my father’s sister whom I never met, and her husband Mr. Arnwine is driving me out of the small bubble of my daily life. Four months ago, I put a note on my desk: “Interview her friends.” This is not an easy task, as Aunt Rose was born in 1908 and died in 1982. Still, the search has become my mission. I write and message back and forth with a web of strangers supporting me. I began my search with Rose’s neighbors in the Calvin Community Chapel Cemetery where she is buried. The grave to the left of Aunt Rose belongs to Yaffee McGee, the first husband of Rose’s friend Margaret, the woman to whom she willed her house. Aunt Rose’s small home, hidden down a dirt driveway off of Brownsville Street, had been hers for forty years. Margaret’s grandson and great-grandson still live there. Margaret, who is buried in another county near her birth family, died a few years after Rose, in 1987; Yaffee lived until 2003. Yaffee’s grave marker identifies him as an Army veteran.

I imagine that Aunt Rose met Yaffee and Margaret McGee in the first years she lived on Paradise Lake. The McGees were newlyweds in 1943. They had been married in nearby Battle Creek, Michigan, though Yaffee was from Ohio and at the time of their marriage, during World War II, was a U.S. Army soldier stationed in New Bedford, Massachusetts. On the McGee’s marriage certificate, “white” is typed into the blanks asking for the applicants’ “color.” But “white” is crossed through and “black” is handwritten above, for both Yaffee and Margaret. It is likely that the clerk typing the certificate looked at the soldier and his fiancée and coded them as white. Sometime between then and the upload to the internet, the correction was made. Because of legal segregation in the United States, everyone was forced to be assigned a race or color by the government. Yaffee’s designation on his marriage certificate mattered: his U.S. Army Registration listed him as Black, and therefore he could only serve in a Black unit in our country’s segregated military.

When I found the McGee’s marriage certificate, with its crossed-out and changed racial designations, I thought I might be on to something important about Aunt Rose’s connection to Margaret. In 1940, Aunt Rose, a daughter of European, Ashkenazi Jewish immigrants, had been designated by the government as “Negro” because of her residence in a segregated Black Chicago neighborhood. In Vandalia, Aunt Rose found other people whose racial designations shifted depending on the laws of where they were and who was filling in the blanks.

Rose’s new friend Margaret Roberts McGee was from a family of several generations of Ohio and Michigan farmers. She had white European grandmothers on both sides of her family. When these women married free, mixed-race men before the Civil War, their families were alternately listed on census forms as “Black” or “mulatto” in rural areas where everyone else on the census page was listed as “white.” In the 1850 census of “Free Inhabitants” of Ohio, Margaret’s paternal great-grandparents were marked mulatto, even though her great-grandmother was white and born in Germany. Twenty years later, in the 1870 census which includes Margaret’s maternal grandparents, the M (mulatto) was crossed out, and W (white) written above to match all the W’s on the rest of the page. I wonder what these farmers thought about the government’s assignations of race and the ramifications on their lives, knowing that socially and legally, racial designations in the United States have life-altering consequences.

Rosella Coker Wade is also buried in the Calvin Community Chapel Cemetery; not far from Rose’s burial plot. In an oral history recorded by a white volunteer in 1978, 90-year-old Ms. Wade, born into some of the oldest families in Cass County, referred to people of the past, and people outside of her family, as “the colored people” or “the whites.” Her storytelling strayed away from identifying either the coloreds or the whites until the interviewer pressed her about the Calvin Community Chapel.

“When there any white people members of your church?”

“No, well, of course some of them are mixed with white, but no white, no pure white.” When she passed away in 1995 at the age of 103, Ms. Wade was the oldest living descendant of Ezekiel Anderson (1788–1851), a Native American man who had, as a child, witnessed the massacre of his whole village, including his family, by white settlers. He survived the attack and was taken by a white man to South Carolina where he was raised. After serving in the war of 1812 under Andrew Jackson, Ezekiel Anderson married a woman of mixed African and white heritage and together they were classified as “colored” rather than “Indian” in the 1820 U.S. Census. In 1838, all of the Native Americans living in their area of Illinois were forced into a westward death march. Ezekiel and his wife, classified not as “Indian” but as “colored,” were not forced into the march. Instead, they packed up and moved to Cass County, Michigan, where he farmed and raised their many children and now has hundreds of descendants. According to an article written in 1995 by Ruth Anderson Walker, another of Ezekiel Anderson’s descendants born in Vandalia, “This mistake in the racial designation [on the U.S. Census] of Ezekiel Anderson proved to be advantageous for him. Indians were feared and hated at that time, while colored people were considered harmless.”

When I mentioned Ezekiel Anderson to my friend Marshall, he said, “Why I think Ruth Walker who wrote all that is still alive.” Ruth Walker’s parents, like Marshall’s parents, Rosella Coker Wade and her parents, and my Aunt Rose, are buried in Calvin Community Cemetery. Marshall had been trying for five years to connect me with some local elders who might have known Aunt Rose and Mr. Arnwine. Ruth Walker had never come up, but he told me he would try to contact her. Ruth Walker is now 91 and still lives in southwest Michigan. I called Ms. Walker on April 29, 2021, and finally, I had someone on the line who knew my aunt and her husband. Someone with stories to tell. Zeb had sold them a car that Ruth hated because it was brightly painted, advertising “Zeb’s BBQ,” like a billboard; “Aunt Rose had been in a car accident with Ruthi’s brother; a good friend of Rose’s attended the same Church of God as Ruth and her mother. I hope our hours-long conversation will be one of many.

From Ruth Walker I learn that Zebedee Arnwine was very light-skinned, from a distance you might think he was white. Ruth knew but didn’t know that Aunt Rose was Jewish. “I thought Arnwine was a Jewish sounding name,” Ruth said, “and I never saw Rose in church.” But she doesn’t remember discussing this with anyone. She told me she remembered Rose as a lonely person, and that she didn’t know any other Jewish people there besides Rose — my aunt who now rests in an unmarked grave in the shadow of the Stone Chapel of the Calvin Community Church.
Fish tales and Fathers’ Day

Fishers’ Day is not a Jewish holiday, but it could be. After all, every day we are commanded to follow the 5th of the 10 Commandments to honor our father and mother. I don’t think that translates into making a brunch or a barbecue, but it could. It has more to do with how we behave and show our respect and love every day. When there is already a great relationship between the generations this is an easy commandment to fulfill. My brother Dan and I, along with our entire family, have been blessed with this easy commandment. With our mother’s death two years ago and now our father’s death a month ago, we are finding new ways to honor them in our daily lives. On Mother’s Day two years ago, I wrote a column highlighting the recipes and memories of mothers. This year it’s in our Dad’s memory that I’m writing a column about fish.

This is Michigan, a state surrounded by the Great Lakes but with hundreds, probably thousands of inland lakes. I know that many people grew up fishing in those lakes in the summer. But how many of you grew up ice fishing in those lakes? I did. I grew up on Orchard Lake and the Oakland County lakes, and I was able to do ice fishing from sunrise to sunset before the sun rose. In short, the time was dependent on the size of the fish. Whether you were catching perch, bluegills, stickleback, minnows, or whitefish, the time was about 6–8 inches long, although they could grow larger, so one serving could be one or two fish. They are usually served filleted. I could tell you how to do that or you could look up a video on the computer. However, I suggest you go to Whole Foods and buy some when they are available. I’ve bought them recently but have never seen them sold in the winter. Maybe the commercial fishing industry is not sending their suppliers out on the frozen lakes in the early morning. Anyhow, they are often called panfish because they are a pan-fry or grill dish and I think that is the best way to make them. Simply bread and fry them. You can use seasoned flour or bread crumbs. I recently used almond meal, aka, ground almonds. Dip the fillets in a beaten egg and then the seasoned flour or bread mix. Fry in a pan with oil or butter (butter is better) for about 3–4 minutes on each side. Serve hot. Leftovers make great sandwiches. Serve with tartar sauce, coleslaw, and potato salad or a green salad.

Mess of Perch or Bluegills or Sunfish

Perch and Bluegills are rather small fish, only about 6 to 8 inches long, although you can grow larger, so one serving could be one or two fish. They are usually served filleted. I could tell you how to do that or you could look up a video on the computer. However, I suggest you go to Whole Foods and buy some when they are available. Lake Superior Whitefish with a Salad, Provençal style

Michigan is famous for its lake whitefish. They are found in Lake Michigan and Lake Superior but in the early half of the 20th century Lake Erie provided the best and sweetest whitefish. That is what our Dad told us. There were lots of fisheries on Lake Erie that supplied Detroit with the majority of its whitefish. The later part of the 20th century was filled with the horror stories about how polluted the lake became but there has been a major effort to clean it up. It’s no longer the main source for the whitefish we get in our stores but there are many fishers who still fish on the lake.

The fish counter at Dexter Davison Market in Oak Park, Michigan, had a nice variety of whole and filleted fish. The most common request was for “a nice piece of whitefish.” I heard that request so many times and always wondered what a nice piece of whitefish looked like. It was usually simply prepared with salt, pepper and paprika and we ate it broiled or on the grill. Here’s a fancier preparation to serve 4 people but it can be doubled or even tripled for more people.

Lake Superior Whitefish

2 pounds of filleted fish
2 lbs olive oil or butter
1 cup dry white wine or vegetable stock
1½ cup chopped shallots
Salt and pepper

Place the olive oil or butter in a warm large pan and sauté the shallots for a few minutes, until they start to look translucent. Then add the wine or stock to cover the bottom of the pan with about ¼ inch of liquid. Simmer for another minute or two to allow the liquid to reduce slightly. Then add the whitefish fillets to the pan, skin-side down, and baste them with the liquid. Cover the pan and the heat to medium-low. It will take about 8 to 10 minutes to fully cook. Baste the fish with the liquid occasionally and make sure they are simmering, not boiling. Serve over rice or Israeli couscous. The fish skin can be removed easily if you don’t want it.

Provençal Style Salad

(based on a recipe served at the Good Thyme Restaurant in Washburn, Wisconsin)
2 lbs shallots, finely chopped
2 pints cherry tomatoes, quartered
¼ cup pitted and chopped Kalamata olives
2 lbs capers
2 lbs dry white wine or white wine vinegar
1 clove garlic, finely chopped
1 tsp fresh thyme, finely chopped or ½ tsp dried thyme
1 to 2 of fresh basil, finely chopped and more for garnish
1 lbs olive oil or more to taste
Salt and pepper to taste.

Place all the ingredients in a bowl and combine. If you make this salad more than 2 hours ahead of time, keep it refrigerated, otherwise, it can stay at room temperature.

Provençal Style Salad

Tartar Sauce

Just combine everything in a mixing bowl and stir.

1 cup real mayonnaise
1 tbs finely chopped dill pickles
1 lbs chopped dill or parsley
1 tsp lemon juice
1 tbs chopped onion
1 tsp sugar
Freshly ground black pepper
2 tbs finely chopped onion (optional)

Filet of Whitefish

Salt and pepper to taste.

Place the fish on a bed of Provençal Style Salad. Sprinkle with salt and pepper.

Hadassah announces 2021 winners of Leaders of Tomorrow Award for Young Women

Hadassah, The Women’s Zionist Organization of America, Inc. (HWZOA), is pleased to announce the 2021 winners of its Leaders of Tomorrow Award for Young Women. Liberty Lebos of Savannah, Georgia, and Sabrina Skolnick of Atlanta, Georgia, will each receive an all-expenses-paid trip to Israel to participate in the Gesher (formerly Machon) annual summer leadership program of Young Judaea. The oldest Zionist youth movement in the United States, Young Judaea encourages young people to become involved in social and educational activities that sharpen their Jewish and Zionist identity.

The Leaders of Tomorrow scholarships are awarded following a merit-based competition. They are given to young women who, because of the leadership roles they have taken on as students, have demonstrated their potential to assume even greater leadership roles as adults, potentially at Hadassah.

During the summer program, the winners learn about the rich culture and history of Israel and the Jewish people and have the opportunity to hone their leadership skills, meet Israeli VIPs and give back to the local communities.

The Leaders of Tomorrow program grew out of a partnership, now more than 100 years old, between Hadassah, the largest Jewish women’s organization in the United States and one dedicated to the State and people of Israel, and Young Judaea, the country’s oldest Zionist youth movement.

Hadassah President Rhoda Smolow states: “We congratulate these exceptional young women, who provided an example of leadership during an incredibly difficult year. They exemplify Hadassah’s mission to empower and inspire women to become leaders in their communities.”

Lynn Davidson, Hadassah National Chair, Young Judaea, states: “We look forward to seeing Liberty Lebos and Sabrina Skolnick continue to grow as young leaders and ultimately become leaders of the next generation of Hadassah members.”

Liberty Lebos, 17, is finishing her junior year at Savannah Arts Academy in Georgia. She attended Camp Judaea in Hendersonville, North Carolina, for seven years. An experience as a navigation leader in an Outward Bound program at camp gave Liberty her first true test as a leader as she safely led her group down the mountain to safety after an incident on the trail. Liberty is the Fundraiser Ambassador for the Rape Crisis Center in Savannah and has volunteered with the local special-needs organization “UTime.” In her free time, she locates clothing at thrift stores to combine with her grandmother’s hand-me-downs to create new designs.

Sabrina Skolnick, 16, is completing her junior year at Midtown International School in Atlanta and, like Liberty, attended Camp Judaea. Sabrina’s grandparents are Holocaust survivors, and she grew up knowing that her life and the life of her family are miracles. Sabrina competed in the National History Day (NHD) international competition for three years and volunteered with the local special-needs organization “UTime.” In her free time, she locates clothing at thrift stores to combine with her grandmother’s hand-me-downs to create new designs.

Rabbi Aharon Goldstein, a Holocaust survivor whose photographs documented the partisan resistance, dies at 101
Shira Hanau, originally for the TJA

Faye Schulman, a Holocaust survivor who lost most of her family to the Nazis but joined a group of partisan fighters and documented their work in photographs, died April 24, The Washington Post reported.

She was 101 years old.

Schulman’s photographs often depicted the smiling faces of young partisan fighters, with Schulman at times at the center in a stylish leopard print coat. Michael Berkowitz, a professor of Jewish history at University College London, told the Post that her photos were “extremely important in documenting the history of the resistance.”

Schulman was born in Lenin, Poland, a town that bordered the Soviet Union. Her family was killed in 1942 when the Nazis liquidated the ghetto there, marching most of the town’s Jews to trenches outside the town and shooting them. Schulman was saved due to her occupation — she was put to work photographing Nazi officials and developing prints for records.

She joined the partisans after escaping to the forests and became a nurse to wounded partisan soldiers. She developed her photos by night.

She was liberated by Soviet troops in 1944 and later that year married a fellow Jewish member of the partisans, Morris Schulman. They lived in a German-occupied persons camp after the war until moving to Canada in 1948, where Schulman lived until her death.

Yosef Kleinman, the youngest survivor to testify at Eichmann trial, dies at 91

Ron Kampea, originally for the JTA

Yosef Kleinman, the youngest Holocaust survivor to testify at the trial of Nazi leader Adolf Eichmann, has died at 91.

Kleinman, who lived in Jerusalem, died Tuesday, according to Akiva Weisz, a reporter for Israel’s Kan public broadcaster. Weisz posted the notice on Twitter.

Kleinman was one of 110 witnesses at the trial of Eichmann, the most senior German official convicted of war crimes in the Nuremberg trials, in 1961. At the time of his testimony, Kleinman was 31 and was the youngest. He was born in 1930 in Tübingen, Germany, and was among the hundreds of thousands of Jews who were deported to Dachau and other Nazi camps during World War II.

Kleinman’s testimony, which riveted the trial judges, was in vivid terms that described the brutality of the Nazis’ operations at Auschwitz and other concentration camps. He described how the Nazis used the victims as guinea pigs for medical experiments and how he and others were forced to work in the camp to survive.

At Auschwitz, Kleinman said, he and his family were forced to work in the camp’s kitchens and laundries. He described how he and his brother, Yitzhak, were forced to work in the camp’s laundry, where they were subjected to harsh conditions and constant abuses.

Kleinman said that after the war, he and his family were able to immigrate to Israel, where they were able to begin their lives anew. He described how he and his brother were able to continue their education and pursue their dreams.

Kleinman was one of the few survivors who were able to testify at the trial of Eichmann. He was also one of the few survivors who were able to return to Auschwitz after the war to commemorate the anniversary of the liberation of the camp.

Kleinman is survived by his children and grandchildren. He is survived by his wife, Shoshana, and his children, who live in Israel. He is also survived by his brother, Yitzhak, who is also a survivor. There were three generations of his family to his hometown.

Yosef Kleinman, the grandson of Isaac Mayer Wise. Doris was able to join them in Cincinnati, Ohio, by June 1940. She attended night school at Hughes High School and received her high school diploma. She moved to New York City, met her husband, and returned to Cincinnati to start a family and build their lives together.

Doris and her husband Bernard were co-founders of Temple Shalom in Cincinnati, Ohio. She was involved in many volunteer activities, including singing in the temple choir, president of Lilah Chapter of Hadassah, serving as a docent at Hebrew Union College and the Cincinnati Art Museum, working at the Krohn Conservatory; and visiting the elderly.

In 1981, by invitation of the mayor’s office of Tübingen (the sister city of Ann Arbor), she returned to Germany with her family. She continued to visit the city on numerous occasions, sharing her experiences with school children and the community. She became lifelong friends with a group of students, volunteers, city officials, and academics dedicated to learning about what happened to the Jews of Tübingen before, during, and after the Holocaust. In November 2017, she led a delegation of three generations of her family to her hometown for what became her last visit. She lit Shabbat candles and participated in the first services led by her son-in-law, which was held on the site of the former synagogue destroyed in Kristallnacht. The following year she and her family visited the birthplace of her husband that is now in Poland.

In 2004, Doris immigrated to Israel to join her daughter and family in Mosch Nir Zvi. She became a well-known figure in the community participating in activities, engaged with her grandchildren’s lives, enjoying musical concerts and family travel adventures.

She returned to the states several times visiting family in Ann Arbor and Cincinnati. Her last visit was in 2016 for the wedding of her step-grandson Noah and his wife Eliana. Paul Steven Swerdlov, M.D., age 69, of Farmington Hills, Michigan, passed away on Sunday, April 11. Paul was a tenured professor of medicine, hematology/oncology, and pediatrics, at Wayne State University School of Medicine. He was a dedicated member of the medical staff at the Karmanos Cancer Institute and several DMC facilities including Children’s Hospital of Michigan, Detroit Receiving Hospital, Harper Hospital, Hutzel Hospital, Rehabilitation Institute of Michigan, and Sinai-Grace Hospital.

Throughout his career, Paul’s focus was on compassionately treating sickle cell disease patients and advancing research to improve their pain management and quality of life. Paul is survived by his family, who will miss him terribly, including his beloved wife, Carolyn; daughter Julie, whom he adored, and her partner Seth Racine; a close-knit group of siblings and their spouses — Irene and Daniel Swerdlov-Freed, Robert and Victoria Swerdlov, and John Swerdlov and Pamela Harnick — and eight nieces and nephews.

Paul was born in 1951 in Brooklyn, New York, to Albert and Bertha Swerdlov, and grew up in Oak Park, Michigan. He received a B.S. in Life Sciences at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and an M.D. from Harvard Medical School and the Harvard-MIT Program in Health Sciences and Technology. He met Carol while he was at MIT and she was at Simmons College, and they married in 1975.

Paul received his medical training at the University of Michigan, Dana Farber Cancer Institute, and Boston Children’s Hospital. In 1985, he accepted an appointment as assistant professor of medicine at the Medical College of Virginia, Virginia Commonwealth University. Ten years later, his family moved to Michigan, where he became an associate professor at Wayne State University (WSU) and led the university’s sickle cell program.

At WSU, Paul pursued and published his research in sickle cell disease, and chaired and served on numerous university, hospital, and professional committees and research review boards. He served as the interim division chief of hematology/oncology at WSU in the early 2000s. Paul especially enjoyed training medical students, residents, and fellows, and received numerous awards for his commitment to teaching.

Paul loved taking snorkeling trips with his family, reading science fiction books (sometimes in Spanish), and enjoying good food and drink. He regularly practiced Bikram yoga, an activity he shared with his daughter Julie. Paul will always be remembered for his intelligence, deep kindness, and ready laughter.

Donations in Paul’s honor can be made to the following organizations: Sickle Cell Disease Association of America - Michigan Chapter: https://www.sicklecell.org; and American Society of Hematology Sickle Cell Disease Initiative Fund: https://www.hematology.org/foundation/supported-programs/sickle-cell-disease-initiative-fund.

I couldn’t go back to school. So I started a farm to connect with my Jewish values.

I couldn’t go back to school. So I started a farm to connect with my Jewish values. With the undying hope from our mother and her parents that we could change the world, and the knowledge and connection to the land instilled in us by our father, we were ready to unite the two halves of our identities and make real change happen.

We were going to create an intentional living community compelled by Jewish values and guided by a shared passion for social justice and equitable food systems, contribute to climate change research while actively sequestering carbon ourselves, and honor indigenous farming practices of agroforestry and biochar.

We were going to demonstrate what regenerative agriculture can look like in the Midwest, teach emerging young farmers and local students, and strive to revitalize the local community. Even though we were two 20-year-olds with minimal agricultural experience, we were ready. We were ready to meet failures and setbacks. We were ready to ask questions to anyone who might have answers. And we were ready to make this collective dream come to fruition.

As wild as our plans sounded and despite the skepticism we met, we made it happen.

All summer, we commuted back and forth from Chicago to clean and renovate the farmhouse where our father grew up in Sheldon, Illinois, and turn his 40-year-old vision of creating a perennial farm into a reality.

We were incredibly fortunate to have access to a house we could live in and land we could farm, most of which was owned by our grandmother at the time. Because we needed funding to purchase everything from tools and building materials to seeds and bare root trees, we spent a great deal of time in the fall searching for and applying for grants.

Receiving several of the grants we applied for allowed us to launch Zumwalt Acres, and grant funding and fundraising continues to be instrumental to our organization today. We are still navigating what long-term financial sustainability looks like for our organization, but we plan for the farm itself to be supported by the profits from the crops and value-added products we sell, while grant funding will be applied to the educational, community outreach and research work we do.

A year after the start of the pandemic, here I am planting trees and growing vegetables with a new cohort of exceptional apprentices. Being back at the farm feels like coming home. It feels like the place where all my roots and all my identities converge. Here I am overcome with hope, gratitude and joy. Here I have a place where I can grow my relationship with nature and the land. Here I have a community where I can be my uncontainably Jewish self. Here I have the opportunity to contribute to climate change research and actively combat the climate crisis. Here I have an emerging organization that embodies the Jewish values I hold so dearly. Here I have finally seen my disparate family roots intertwine and grow in common, fueled by a shared belief that hope is our most essential asset in striving to repair the world.

While my twin sister and I do plan on returning to school in the fall, we will remain integrally involved in running the farm and organization. Along with our first cohorts of apprentices, we feel like we are laying the groundwork for a community that will offer continual support and guidance will be self-sustaining and thrive.

Zumwalt Acres is located on the traditional unceded homelands of Kiikaapoo (Kickapoo), Peoria, Kaskaskia, Bodéwadmikwe (Potawatomi), Myaamia and Očhéthi Sakowin peoples.
