Detroit Hazon remains important partner after Hazon-Pearlstone creates new epicenter of Jewish sustainability work

Ruby Malcom, originally for the JTA

With the pending merger of Hazon and the Pearlstone Retreat Center, Baltimore is poised to become a national leader in the Jewish outdoor food, farming and environmental education movement.

Pearlstone, a Jewish retreat center and outdoor education site in the Baltimore suburb of Reisterstown funded by the local federation, is absorbing into Hazon, the country's largest faith-based environmental organization. And for the organizations' heads, this new powerhouse is arriving not a moment too soon.

"The Jewish community has a unique capacity — and, I would argue, a moral obligation — in this historic inflection point," Pearlstone CEO Jakir Manela said. "The climate crisis is real, and it threatens the future of our planet."

Manela will become CEO of the new merged entity, to be called simply Hazon, on Aug. 1, though the merger won't fully take effect until 2022. And the Pearlstone campus will become the new national headquarters for Hazon, which is currently based in New York. Hazon will maintain its offices in New York and Detroit, as well as its own conference center in Connecticut.

The idea for the merger came about during a search to replace Nigel Savage, the outgoing Hazon CEO, who informed the Hazon board last summer that he would be stepping down by this August. Manela was identified during the search process, and so arose the idea to merge Pearlstone and Hazon into one entity.

Hazon Detroit, which organizes the annual Michigan Jewish Food Festival, distributes "Sustainability Kits," and helps Jewish organizations achieve a "Seal of Sustainability," is an important hub of Hazon activity.

"For an article in the Detroit Jewish News, Jakir Manela, new CEO of Hazon, said, "These are two great cities, with two strong Jewish communities, two strong federations — and a slew of challenges on the ground — that Hazon Detroit and Pearlstone are addressing. I'm excited to work with Wren Hack and her team, and I plan to be in Detroit in the fall. I hope that we can apply in the Baltimore area some of the work of Hazon Detroit — and that we can offer to Hazon Detroit some of the things we've been doing in Baltimore and in the Chesapeake Bay."

Wren Hack, director of Hazon Detroit, added, "I'm excited about the possibilities of this merger. And I'm especially delighted to see that Pearlstone's work, in providing food to people in need during COVID so closely parallels what we've done these last 15 months."

The combined organization will manage the Israel Center at the J, combining the Ann Arbor Jewish Film Festival with Cinetopia, establishing the annual Golf Outing for Youth Scholarships, and the 35th Anniversary Founders Gala and Archive Exhibition. The Israel Center at the J hosted the J's very first Zoom program in April 2020, as well as the recent innovative virtual travel week, "The Israel Experience: Don't Leave Home to Visit this past May."

Silver's overall role included daily operations, membership, development, marketing, communications, and strategic programmatic partnerships. David Stone, executive director of the Ann Arbor Jewish Community Foundation, will lead Hazon Detroit until the new CEO takes over in August 2022.

"Thank you to all who have partnered with us in all these years in Hazon Detroit," Stone said. "We have come a long way, and while there's still a lot ahead, the work is important and the time is right."

"I am excited about working with the caring, passionate, and dedicated people at the Kahn JCC. They see the potential to rebuild post pandemic into a vibrant institution — and, I would argue, a moral obligation — in this historic inflection point," Stone said. "I'm excited to work with Wren Hack and her team, and I plan to be in Detroit in the fall. I hope that we can apply in the Baltimore area some of the work of Hazon Detroit — and that we can offer to Hazon Detroit some of the things we've been doing in Baltimore and in the Chesapeake Bay."

Surely you have felt it. The majestic rise in your chest when singing "Etz Chayim Hi" as the Torah is returned to the ark. The deep, collective longing of "Avenu Elyon" as the Torah is marched before the Ark.

"I'm excited about the possibilities of this merger. And I'm especially delighted to see that Pearlstone's work, in providing food to people in need during COVID so closely parallels what we've done these last 15 months."
From the Editor

A wild garden

Two days ago, I went to my first-since-the-pandemic, in-person, Friday evening service to welcome Shabbat. With new sound and video equipment so people staying cozy at home could continue to livestream, the AA Reconstructionist gathering under tents was still vulnerable to wind and rain. Luckily the drizzle held off to wind and rain. Luckily the drizzle held off till after a few rounds of Aleinu Ein Od and it) put our arms around each other for a final blessing. I thought many of us looked shell-shocked. Still it was a milestone.

This issue of the WJN contains news of new staff and leaders at the Jewish Federation, Hebrew Day School, and the Orthodox Minyan and transitions at other local institutions. I hope readers will see here Jewish culture is truly a well that made the words squished in and feel welcomed in the community. On a related note, Washtenaw says good-bye to Clara Silver, the Director of Operations at Hebrew Day School, and the Orthodox Simchas and Sorrows...
Federation awards $1.4 million, celebrates a year of resilience

Rachel Wall, special to the WJN

At some point, the world will settle back to normal. But until then, it continues to bear repeating that this past year has been unlike any in recent memory, and Federation’s Annual Meeting on the evening of June 9 was no exception. Most notably, besides the obvious digital platform, programs for previous meetings have revolved around outside speakers on matters of general interest, such as security. This year, the community was its own keynote speaker.

“We have been through so much as a community this year,” explains Federation Executive Director Eileen Freed on the choice to utilize art created by community members as interludes between more formal business presentations. “Music, poetry, and other forms of artistic expression can help us look back on our experiences in a unique and powerful way that feels particularly appropriate for this moment.”

And so, what would have been a standard photo retrospective of the year was instead transformed by background music composed by local musician Brandy Sinco, who serves as pianist for the Jewish Cultural Society. Sinco’s piece for piano and saxophone, “The Light After the Blues,” evoked strong feelings of sadness for the many losses of the past year, as well as hope for the future.

An otherwise straightforward slideshow was further enhanced by paintings by community members Mary Schuman and Max Plona. Schuman and Plona’s visual representations of the year accompanied by Sinco’s stirring melody produced an emotional effect for attendees.

Additional artistic reflections were provided by Adam and Ethan Kahan’s instrumental version of the traditional prayer “Avinu Malkeinu;” Beth Dwoskin’s moving recitation of her original poem “Prayer for the State of Israel;” and a series of poems written and performed by the fourth grade class at Hebrew Day School of Ann Arbor, composed in the complex Japanese tanka style in both English and Hebrew.

More than 120 volunteers were thanked for their work on programming for groups such as women, physicians, Jewish Young Professionals, and those who wish to connect with Israel. Volunteers also make possible the successful functioning of Federation as an organization, including the volunteer Board of Directors, Finance Committee, and Allocations Committee.

A significant cadre of volunteers worked tirelessly over the last year to raise funds for the 2021 Annual Community Campaign. Led by Campaign Chair Babette Levy Daskin, the Campaign Volunteer Team helped raise over $1.4 million to enrich Jewish life in greater Ann Arbor, in Israel, and around the world. 775 community members donated this year, including over 130 who didn’t give in 2020. The community’s combined generosity represents a 4% increase in funds raised over last year’s campaign.

Organizations who have received allocations from the campaign include, among many others, Jewish Family Services of...
AA Orthodox Minyan welcomes new leader

Rachel Wall, special to the WJN

Prodigious organizational skills. In addition, experience in client-facing roles have specialized in...
Joelle Abramowitz, originally from New Jersey, lived in Washington, D.C., Brussels, Hong Kong, Chicago, and Seattle before coming to Ann Arbor in 2016. She is a Ph.D. economist working as research faculty at the University of Michigan’s Institute for Social Research, and she is an active participant in our local Jewish community. In fact, at the young age of 35, Joelle is paving the way for young adults in Ann Arbor in that she has signed a commitment to leave a legacy gift as part of the LIFE & LEGACY program.

Joelle’s involvement in the Jewish Federation of Greater Ann Arbor began when she first moved to town and wanted to get connected to the Jewish community and make new friends. Joelle immediately started attending Jewish Young Professional programs. She had a vision of creating a novel program where text study was combined with sharing of personal experience so as to create deep connection between participants. Initially called “Talboo Topics,” the program later became known as “Delicious Deep Dive Discussion” and was a tremendous success. Joelle initiated the program in 2018 to leave a legacy gift as part of the LIFE & LEGACY program.

Joelle believes in the Jewish Federation of Greater Ann Arbor Outreach and Program Coordinator Jessica Weil notes that, “Joelle continues to strengthen our Jewish community by empowering others to lead. She is a role model to young adults in the community, and her decision to sign a LOI is inspiring to so many young adults!” Federation is one of 11 local Jewish organizations participating in the LIFE & LEGACY program.

The Jewish Federation of Greater Ann Arbor Outreach and Program Coordinator Jessica Weil notes that, “Joelle continues to strengthen our Jewish community by empowering others to lead. She is a role model to young adults in the community, and her decision to sign a LOI is inspiring to so many young adults!” Federation is one of 11 local Jewish organizations participating in the LIFE & LEGACY program. The other organizations are: Ann Arbor Orthodox Minyan, Beth Israel Congregation, Chabad House of Ann Arbor, Eastern Michigan University Center for Jewish Studies, Hebrew Day School of Ann Arbor, Jewish Community Center of Greater Ann Arbor, Jewish Cultural Society, Jewish Family Services of Washtenaw County, Temple Beth Emeth, and University of Michigan Hillel. Please reach out to Margaret Schreiber for more information on the LIFE & LEGACY program, via phone (734-773-3538) or email (margaret@jewishannarbor.org).

Executive Director Eileen Freed closed the evening with appreciations of Federation’s professional team, including two staff members, Stephanie Glass and Jessica Weil, whose tenures at Federation are ending this year. Stephanie Glass heads to the East Coast and Weil is moving back to New York, which showed 23 films, and Detroit, which showed 25 films. Even though Ann Arbor has significantly less Jewish and general population than either of those cities, we hosted 22 films representing many genres, including two programs of multiple short films. I think what distinguishes this festival are the programs we build around the films via the presenters and moderators. The festival committee identifies the films around which to build forums for community interaction. One example is the sponsor dinner held in conjunction with the film festival. Joelle Abramowitz, president of the JYP Board, Joelle will continue to serve on the Board of Directors for Federation.

When asked why she decided to sign a “Letter of Intent” (LOI) to leave an after-lifetime gift to Federation, Joelle said “I am very committed to supporting our Jewish community now and in the future. I am interested in how Jewish organizations work and how to make them sustainable. I chose to make this legacy commitment because I want to see a flourishing Jewish community in general and the Ann Arbor Jewish community in particular — in the same way that JYP helps to foster young leadership as an investment in our future, so too is legacy giving an investment in our community.”

Joelle Abramowitz of 35, Joelle is paving the way for young adults in Ann Arbor in that she has signed a commitment to leave a legacy gift as part of the LIFE & LEGACY program.
Climate conversations: All we can save

By Idelle Hammond-Sass

Artists: Nancy Cohen, Kate Dodd, Laura Earle, Gina R. Furnani, Leslie Sobel, Tracey Easthope, Elizabeth Barrick Fall, Susan Hoffman Fishman

Two paintings by Susan Hartman Fishman

Barrier by Nancy Cohen

Detail of Leslie Sobel’s Interwoven Ecologies

House of Cards by Laura Earle

Climate Conversations will be at 22 North Gallery until August 22

When a group of artists meet over the course of a year to read, discuss, and make art based on shared content, diverse interpretations are bound to occur. The images on exhibit at Climate Conversations: All We Can Save at the Ypsilanti gallery 22 North (July 3 to August 22) are based on the collected essays from the book All We Can Save: Truth, Courage, and Solutions for the Climate Crisis, edited by geographer and writer Katharine Wilkinson and marine biologist Ayana Johnson. Katharine Wilkinson was named by Time magazine as one of 15 “women who will save the world.” She organizes “The All We Can Save Project” with Dr. Ayana Elizabeth Johnson in support of women leading on climate issues. If it is women who will save the world, these women artists are engaging many to be moved to become part of a solution through encounters with their art.

The curators of Climate Conversations, Leslie Sobel and Laura Earle, have both made art that addresses the climate crisis using the Drawdown Project (drawdown.org) as their jumping off point to curate other shows. The Drawdown Project’s mission is to help the world reach “Drawdown”—the point in the future when levels of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere stop climbing and start to steadily decline, thereby stopping catastrophic climate change— as quickly, safely, and equitably as possible. Drawdown encourages people to reduce sources (brining emissions to zero), support sinks (uplift nature’s carbon cycle), and improve society (fostering equality for all).

Sobel has accompanied research scientists to the Southwest and the Yukon, and has plans to accompany a team to the Arctic in 2022. Having artists on board scientific research expeditions offers perspectives that are brought back to the community through community programs. Not unlike 19th century naturalists traveling with expeditions, these artists act as chroniclers and witnesses of today’s turbulent world. Two paintings by Susan Hartman Fishman are striking in their energy and physicality. For In the Beginning there was only water, I and 2, Fishman uses acrylic on paper to create an active surface that evokes water, ice, stormy seas and skies. Her reference to Genesis shows the forces of nature as generative and powerful. Water, which covers most of the planet, is responsible for life; in fact the phrase, “Water is Life” arises on seeing these pieces. Geologic time, and the biblical reference, give the viewer a way to look at the miracle of life on this planet. On the 3 billionth day Algae made the Plant World is another of Fishman’s paintings that continues the reference with an aerial view of forest and river systems flowing to the sea. While the rust red of the river first recalls red algae blooms, it also exuberantly shows a world exploding with plant life. Again, geologic time is caught in a single moment of an evolving world.

Artist Kate Dodd uses images of beautiful birds encased behind glycine envelope windows to create powerful collages about migration. No place to land features birds encased like specimens, while silhouettes of birds cut from envelopes cast shadows on the wall. Do we have the expectation that birds and mail should both reach their destinations despite storms, currents, and the high carbon footprint of aviation and airplane engines? For purely aesthetic reasons I was drawn to Marsh Drawing by Nancy Cohen. The long, horizontal paper and fiber pieces were quiet and soft, and I appreciated her use of mark-making and the textures of kozo (mulberry bark), paper pulp, handmade paper, and cordage. Reminiscent of a scroll or a work of Aboriginal art, the surfaces seemed to map a specific place or memory. Leslie Sobel’s piece, Interwoven Ecologies, burnedished wax surfaces of painted encaustic. Her pieces rotate the images, as these kinetic artifacts of industry and agriculture evoke a slower time.

The series of poster-like images by Tracey Easthope of Ann Arbor are colorful and tongue in cheek. If women are central to the solution, Easthope places women in the spotlight modeling climate conscious garb and activities. While they may seem lighthearted, the fact is that women are at greater risk from weather related conditions and need survival strategies to cope with them. They also hold some of the creative solutions we need to survive – as the saying goes, “to change everything, we need everyone.”

This show will be at 22 North Gallery in Ypsilanti thru August 22 and will be traveling in a second iteration to the Janice Charach Gallery at the JCC of Greater Detroit in January 2022. A special Tu B’Shvat Seder will be org-
Introducing JCLP incoming class of 2023

Paige Walker, special of the WJN

JCLP is planning to welcome new faces joining the University’s Hybrid model, programs, and events. A big part of the summertime activity is planning to welcome new faces joining the cohort of JCLP scholars. The seven incoming students of the Class of 2023 come from a range of backgrounds and experiences.

Rachel Brustein joins JCLP after spending four years in her hometown of Chicago, Illinois, working in a variety of settings, including youth development, Jewish education, babysitting, and the mortgage industry. She also spent time organizing with IfNotNow and the Sunrise Movement, and serving as assistant teaching at Temple Beth Emeth. As well as planning for after high school. The close relationships with her students from these roles inspired her to pursue a Masters of Social Work degree. Elana plans to combine her interests of religious identity development, higher education, and social work to support students on college campuses.

Although an erstwhile resident of Australia, Scotland, and most recently Norway, Jorgen Reberg has been a permanent fixture of Michigan’s flora and fauna since July of 2014. Six years later, he graduated from Grand Valley State University with a BS in Psychology and minors in Human Rights and Middle East Studies. His years in Grand Rapids were filled with many meaningful experiences, but few could compare with the opportunity to collaborate with the USC Shoa Foundation. Jorgen’s fluency in Norwegian meant he was able to translate their collection of Norwegian Holocaust testimonies, which had been virtually untouched for more than twenty years. His chosen pathway in the MSW program is Program Evaluation and Applied Research, which he hopes (nay, is determined!) will provide him with both the knowledge and understanding of how to best improve the lives of today’s Norwegian Jewish community.

Ellery is so excited to be returning to Ann Arbor to study Social Work on the Interpersonal Practice track and be a part of JCLP. After undergrad, she worked at Repair the World Detroit as their Youth & Family Engagement Associate running PeerCorps Detroit, their teen service-learning program, and supervising Repair fellows in their year of service at Detroit nonprofit organizations. Outside of work, Ellery uses social media to share size-inclusive clothing and resources on combating diet culture and fatphobia. She is passionate about empowering young people, swimming in lakes, knitting blankets, and eating bagels!

Caroline Strauss is originally from Farmington Hills. She recently graduated from Michigan State University with a Bachelor of Arts in Psychology with minors in Human Behavior and Social Services and Health Promotion. During her time in undergrad, Caroline was involved at Michigan State Hillel as the Vice President of Administration, where she planned programs for students and interacted with the greater campus community on behalf of the Jewish community. She also held research positions in the Department of Psychology which furthered her passion and interest in helping people. Caroline’s Jewish background included five summers at Camp Tamarack as well as involvement at Adat Shalom Synagogue. She became particularly interested in the intersection of social work and Judaism after completing a summer internship at Jewish Family Services of Metropolitan Detroit where she learned more about how the organization helps to serve the community around them. Caroline is specifically interested in working with children and families surrounding mental health and breaking the stigma around it. She is excited and honored to be a part of the JCLP and the University of Michigan School of Social Work!

In addition to first year students, JCLP is proud to announce the appointment of and welcome Alice Mishkin, LMSW and JCLP ’13, as interim director of the program while Karla Goldman is on sabbatical. Alice is a 4th year PhD student in the Department of American Culture at the University of Michigan.

Community members can meet Alice and the entire cohort of Jewish Communal Leadership students at the annual Community Welcome Breakfast on Monday, August 23rd. The event will be online via Zoom from 8 a.m. to 9 a.m. Please email JCLP Program Coordinator Paige Walker at vpwalker@umich.edu for information. ■ and the Sunrise Movement, and serving as a Leadership Fellow with Mishkan Chicago. In 2016–2017, Rachel participated in Avodah in Washington, D.C., where she worked at Interfaith Power & Light, organizing faith communities to take action on climate change. Rachel graduated from Goucher College in 2016 with a BA in sociology. At Goucher, Rachel was the editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, and wrote her senior paper on feminist interpretations of mikveh rituals. She is excited to be in school again and will be studying Research and Program Evaluation.

Paige Walker, special of the WJN

Introducing JCLP incoming class of 2023

A Dallas, Texas, native, but raised in Ann Arbor, Abby Calef is eager to return home to join the JCLP cohort. For the past two years, Abby has been working for Hillel Campus Alliance of Michigan where she served Hillels at ten college campuses across the state. Her work included program planning, interfaith work, antisemitism education, and the Sunrise Movement, and serving as a leadership fellow with Mishkan Chicago. In 2016–2017, Rachel participated in Avodah in Washington, D.C., where she worked at Interfaith Power & Light, organizing faith communities to take action on climate change. Rachel graduated from Goucher College in 2016 with a BA in sociology. At Goucher, Rachel was the editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, and wrote her senior paper on feminist interpretations of mikveh rituals. She is excited to be in school again and will be studying Research and Program Evaluation.

A Dallas, Texas, native, but raised in Ann Arbor, Abby Calef is eager to return home to join the JCLP cohort. For the past two years, Abby has been working for Hillel Campus Alliance of Michigan where she served Hillels at ten college campuses across the state. Her work included program planning, interfaith work, antisemitism education, and the Sunrise Movement, and serving as a leadership fellow with Mishkan Chicago. In 2016–2017, Rachel participated in Avodah in Washington, D.C., where she worked at Interfaith Power & Light, organizing faith communities to take action on climate change. Rachel graduated from Goucher College in 2016 with a BA in sociology. At Goucher, Rachel was the editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, and wrote her senior paper on feminist interpretations of mikveh rituals. She is excited to be in school again and will be studying Research and Program Evaluation.

A Dallas, Texas, native, but raised in Ann Arbor, Abby Calef is eager to return home to join the JCLP cohort. For the past two years, Abby has been working for Hillel Campus Alliance of Michigan where she served Hillels at ten college campuses across the state. Her work included program planning, interfaith work, antisemitism education, and the Sunrise Movement, and serving as a leadership fellow with Mishkan Chicago. In 2016–2017, Rachel participated in Avodah in Washington, D.C., where she worked at Interfaith Power & Light, organizing faith communities to take action on climate change. Rachel graduated from Goucher College in 2016 with a BA in sociology. At Goucher, Rachel was the editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, and wrote her senior paper on feminist interpretations of mikveh rituals. She is excited to be in school again and will be studying Research and Program Evaluation.

A Dallas, Texas, native, but raised in Ann Arbor, Abby Calef is eager to return home to join the JCLP cohort. For the past two years, Abby has been working for Hillel Campus Alliance of Michigan where she served Hillels at ten college campuses across the state. Her work included program planning, interfaith work, antisemitism education, and the Sunrise Movement, and serving as a leadership fellow with Mishkan Chicago. In 2016–2017, Rachel participated in Avodah in Washington, D.C., where she worked at Interfaith Power & Light, organizing faith communities to take action on climate change. Rachel graduated from Goucher College in 2016 with a BA in sociology. At Goucher, Rachel was the editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, and wrote her senior paper on feminist interpretations of mikveh rituals. She is excited to be in school again and will be studying Research and Program Evaluation.

A Dallas, Texas, native, but raised in Ann Arbor, Abby Calef is eager to return home to join the JCLP cohort. For the past two years, Abby has been working for Hillel Campus Alliance of Michigan where she served Hillels at ten college campuses across the state. Her work included program planning, interfaith work, antisemitism education, and the Sunrise Movement, and serving as a leadership fellow with Mishkan Chicago. In 2016–2017, Rachel participated in Avodah in Washington, D.C., where she worked at Interfaith Power & Light, organizing faith communities to take action on climate change. Rachel graduated from Goucher College in 2016 with a BA in sociology. At Goucher, Rachel was the editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, and wrote her senior paper on feminist interpretations of mikveh rituals. She is excited to be in school again and will be studying Research and Program Evaluation.

A Dallas, Texas, native, but raised in Ann Arbor, Abby Calef is eager to return home to join the JCLP cohort. For the past two years, Abby has been working for Hillel Campus Alliance of Michigan where she served Hillels at ten college campuses across the state. Her work included program planning, interfaith work, antisemitism education, and the Sunrise Movement, and serving as a leadership fellow with Mishkan Chicago. In 2016–2017, Rachel participated in Avodah in Washington, D.C., where she worked at Interfaith Power & Light, organizing faith communities to take action on climate change. Rachel graduated from Goucher College in 2016 with a BA in sociology. At Goucher, Rachel was the editor-in-chief of the student newspaper, and wrote her senior paper on feminist interpretations of mikveh rituals. She is excited to be in school again and will be studying Research and Program Evaluation.
Iona (1925–2000) and Henia Karmel (1922–1984) were sisters from Kraków, Poland, who survived ghettos, concentration camps and death marches. In the camps, they wrote poetry that Henia hid in the hems of her skirt. In 2007, the poems were published in English as A Wall of Two: Poems of Resistance and Suffering from Kraków to Buchenwald and Beyond, edited and adapted by American poet Fanny Howe from word-for-word translations of the Polish poems.

In America, Henia published two books in English, The Bader of Jacob Street and Marek and Lisa. Iona wrote two novels in English, Stephanie and An Estate of Memory. First published in 1969, An Estate of Memory was one of the first works of fiction about the Holocaust by a woman. It was reprinted in paperback by the Feminist Press at CUNY in 1986. All of their books are available in the Temple Beth Emeth Library.

Iona became a lecturer in the Program in Writing and Humanistic Studies at MIT, working there from 1979 to 1990. The Iona Karmel Writing Prizes are awarded every May by MIT’s Comparative Media Studies/Writing program. In 1994, Iona received the rare Dearsen Award for Distinguished Service at MIT.

Henia and her husband Leon Wolfe had two children, John and Joy. Joy married Douglas Ensor and became a psychologist here in Ann Arbor. One of Joy’s children, Hannah Ensor, is a poet and professor of creative writing in the Resident Fellows and Emeritus program at MIT.

Joy remembers her mother Henia Karmel–Wolfe with love, and honors her memory often. Iona was a major presence in the lives of Joy, Hannah, and Jill.

Thanks to the WIN, Jill met Joy and Hannah for the first time “in person” (i.e. on Zoom). Beth: Was their name in Poland really Karmel? It’s a modern Hebrew name.

Joy: Yes! They were Sephardic and came to Kraków in 1942. One of my mother’s Karmel cousins has traced the genealogy back to Spain and my DNA test report said that the family originated in the Middle East, then got to Spain via North Africa, then travelled across Europe to Kraków. Another cousin traced the Karmel line back to the 1700s in Poland. My grandfather came from a line of Hasids. Ila was called Ila. Her given name in Yiddish was Beala — there’s a long line of Beulas in the family. Ila would use our English names but pronounce the vowels in Polish and give them a Polish diminutive. Simcha Mita was my grandmother’s name. I’m named for her (Simcha translates to Joy), so Ila called me Joyinka.

Beth: What was their educational background? Joy: They spoke Polish, but they were fluent in Yiddish. They attended the Hebrew Gymnasium in Kraków, which emphasized Polish and Hebrew. They went to Zosnitz summer camps to prepare themselves for kibbutz life. They were acculturated rather than assimilated. My parents spoke Polish to each other but didn’t want us to learn it because it was the language of our oppression.

Beth: Were the sisters close here in America?

Joy: Yes, so close that it seems they needed to differentiate themselves. The family lore was that Ila was the country mouse, Henia was the city mouse. Henia was the beauty, Ila was the brain, though they both had beauty and brains. Henia was the better poet, Ila was the better novelist. Personally, I felt that Ila wrote literature, while Henia wrote fiction. Ila was messy — her kitchen counters drove Henia crazy, with cats walking on the counters. Henia was neat. Henia was an indifferent cook. Ila was an amazing cook and baker.

Beth: Hannah, do you remember Henia as a grandmother? Hannah: Ila and Henia lived a very great life! Have you read any of their work?

Joy: Henia died before I was born. Ila died when I was 13, and she was a big part of my life. We traveled east frequently to visit her outside of Boston. I remember cooking and baking with her. She made very elaborate, delicious meals. I haven’t been able to read their books — I’ve felt a block. I treasure the books as objects, which would piss off both of them. There’s been some familial bonding over the psychological blocks that keep us from engaging with the work. Partly, I feared that reading the book would displace my limited memories of Ila. But, I may be ready to read them.

Beth: What did Henia say to you about her experiences during the war or her life in Kraków?

Joy: She said, “The war made people who they were only more so.” She wrote an essay where she recalled that when I asked her, “Why did the family die in the war?” She answered, “It’s what God wanted.” She concluded the essay by saying, “God was invented by a mother who could no longer answer her child’s questions.”

Beth: What was their relationship to Judaism? Joy: Each of them in their own way had a complicated relationship to God. My mother dutifully went to synagogue, but American by women entered the canon, and An Estate of Memory is not easy reading. Henia’s book, The Bader of Jacob Street, was coming-of-age story and made a New York Public Library list of recommended books for young adults. The language is very accessible in both her novels. Henia started a journal when my brother John was born. She promised him that she would create legend, pass on family lore, and tell him about the people he would never be able to meet. She only wrote for three weeks, but later on she decided to try. She used to be a fussy eater, so my mother would bribe me to eat with stories. She told me pre-war stories, about playing in the park in Warsaw with her grandmother, about how Aunt Dora became a pedestrian in Kraków, about childhood seders. She described a vibrant, rich Jewish life before the war. Writing is an intergenerational feature of the family, from Henia and Ila through to my daughter Hannah and my other daughter, Sarah, who is an English professor at Wisconsin. My brother John has written short stories and novels; his son, Aaron Wolfe, is a Moth GrandSLAM winning storyteller and film maker. I am co-editor of, and contributor to, a collection of essays by members of TBE Generations After entitled The Ones Who Remember: Second-Generation Voices of the Holocaust, to be published in spring 2022.

Beth: Jill, how did you come to study with Iona Karmel?

Jill: I was a student in a creative writing workshop with Fanny Howe. One day, she asked us to write a letter to someone with whom we’d been meaning to connect for a long time. I wrote to my grandfather. He passed away shortly thereafter. I told Fanny and she said, “There’s someone I’d like you to meet.” Ila’s classes were full — as usual — but on Fanny’s urging, Ila offered to do an independent study with me. That was the start of a beautiful mentorship — in and out of the classroom. But Ila refused to be my thesis advisor. At the time, I was trying my hand at experimental fiction and she considered herself to be a “classicist.” Though she bristled at labels too — “Holocaust” and “feminist” writer especially. She used to say that she was just a human being writing about human beings.

Hannah: Ila would probably say that Joy was the only one in the family who did anything useful.

Storyteller, poet, playwright and math teacher, Jill Halpern won the University of Michigan Provost’s Teaching Innovation Prize for Calculus in the Commons: Bringing Math to Life.

Joy Wolfe Ensor is an editor, along with Rita Benson, Julie Ellis, and Ruth Wade, of the forthcoming book The Ones Who Remember: Second-Generation Voices of the Holocaust, scheduled for April 2022 publication by City Point Press.

Hannah Ensor (they & she) is a poet and essayist working around topics of pop culture, sports, queer television, and mass media. Their first book of poetry is Love Dream With Television (Noemi Press, 2018). With Natalie Diaz she served as associate editor of Bodies Built for Game, an anthology of contemporary sports literature. In 2019 they won the Judith A. Markowitz Award for Emerging Writers from Lambda Literary.
Andy Nagy: Survivor of Nazis and Communists, immigrant, and renowned scientist

By Chuck Newman,
Editor's Note: In January, Chuck Newman began hosting a biweekly series of "Conversations," presented by the Jewish Cultural Arts and Education department of the Jewish Community Center of Greater Ann Arbor. The talk show format of the Zoom presentations highlight Chuck's easygoing style and deep curiosity about science, politics, and connections between our local environment and the world.

Andy Nagy was born in Budapest, Hungary, in 1932 to solidly middle class assimilated Jewish parents. His father was a veteran of the Hungarian army and was involved with the short-lived Bolshevnik revolutionary government.

In my conversation with Andy he recounted his harrowing and unimaginable experiences during World War II.

During the years 1937 and 1938, his aunt decided that war was inevitable and that she wanted her children to be far away. Her husband didn't want to go, but she and their children moved to Sydney, Australia. Andy's parents considered moving too, but didn't because they didn't want to leave their families.

Instead, his father had the family convert to Catholicism hoping that it would spare the family from future problems. At the onset of WWII, Hungary joined the Axis powers. By 1942 there were "Jewish laws" in effect, but life went on relatively undisturbed other than Andy having a few fights after being called a "stinking Jew."

His family had another opportunity to escape when his father was warned of the impending occupation of the country by Germany. He went to the Turkish Embassy where he was told he could get a visa to travel to neutral Turkey, but again Andy's mother did not want to leave.

After the occupation in 1944 there were endless telephone calls with the relatives in rural Polgár trying to decide whether it was safe to leave. Eventually Andy was able to leave Communist Hungary for Australia where he worked as a laborer while he went to night school to get his undergraduate degree. His Fulbright scholarship enabled him to study for a Master's degree in the United States and subsequently he earned his Doctorate at the University of Michigan. To support his studies he took a job at the Space Physics Laboratory, found that they liked the work and eventually became, according to someone that was there, the "smartest person in a room full of smart people."

In the 1980s he was part of an initiative that resulted in the University of Michigan honoring Raoul Wallenberg by establishing the Wallenberg lecture series to remember and celebrate his heroism and courage.

Even though he has retired from the University of Michigan where he was a professor of atmospheric and oceanic science and professor of electrical engineering and computer science, he continues, at age 89, to be a valued consultant to NASA.

Andy Nagy's interview on Conversations and other previous shows can be seen at https://jsccannarbor.org/event/conversations.
Hazon-Pearlstone merger, continued from page 1

age a $12 million budget and more than 200 staff and reach nearly 50,000 program participants annually.

Formed within a year of each other, Hazon and Pearlstone have each committed in their own way to forming a Jewish response to the larger challenges facing the environment. Savage founded Hazon in 2000 while hiking in Israel during a break from his career as a professional fund manager in London. He had become distraught at what he perceived as the Jewish community’s lack of attention being paid to environmental issues.

“I was starting to see that the Jewish tradition didn’t enter human history in synagogues, in faith schools or in a JCC,” he said. “We entered human history in relation to the natural world.”

Increasingly aware that humans were destroying the planet, Savage envisioned Hazon as a Jewish sustainability initiative. Today the organization offers Jewish-themed farm vacations, adult summer camps, holiday experienc-es, climate activism and other programs geared around the natural world. That Adahamah Fellowship, a three-month social justice program for adults in their 20s and 30s, blends farm-to-table living and community building with Jewish learning and spiritual practice.

Less than a year after Hazon’s founding, Baltimore’s Jewish federation — known as The Associated — launched the Pearlstone Center, which serves as a venue for professional conferences, spiritual retreats and a bevy of lifecycle events. Initially its campus was 7 acres. In 2006, Manela founded Pearlstone’s Kayam Farm, which offers hands-on environmental education and aims to inspire social and environmental responsibility.

When Pearlstone’s neighbor, Camp Milldale, closed in 2015, The Associated repurposed the land, expanding Pearlstone’s scope to 180 acres. Today The Associated owns the Pearlstone property, provides the center with an annual unrestricted grant and includes it in the federation’s large-scale solar project, which intends to offset each of its agencies’ electricity use with solar energy by 50%. During COVID-19, The Associated also helped Pearlstone secure a large paycheck protection program loan.

“We’ve watched Pearlstone go from an idea to a retreat center to a thriving institution that we have long believed has significance beyond the boundaries of the Baltimore Jewish community,” founders Richie Pearlstone and Josh Fidler, past board chair PJ. Pearlstone and Associated President Marc Terrill said in a joint statement. “We are thrilled that Pearlstone will now be the home of what we expect and intend will become one of the most exciting institutions in American Jewish life in the coming decade and beyond.”

Manela described the Jewish outdoor food, farming and environmental education movement — which seeks to promote health, equity and sustainability — as “one of the most powerful forces in Jewish life.”

“It’s not structured like a denomination,” he said, “but it has a depth of spirit, potential and resonance across denominations and age groups that speaks so deeply to the moment that we’re in — this historical inflection point for the Jewish people, for all of humanity, and for all of creation.”

Through strategic partnerships and its own immersive programming, the merged organization says it will work to weave justice and sustainability into the fabric of Jewish life on the local, national and global levels.

In addition to Manela becoming CEO, Eve Wachhaus, Pearlstone’s deputy director, will become chief operating officer of Hazon in August. She will also manage operations for Pearlstone’s campus, which serves as a venue for professional conferences, spiritual retreats and a bevy of life-cycle events.

Retreat centers nationwide were hit hard by COVID-19. Last year, Pearlstone experienced a 90% reduction in sales revenue, specifically regarding the revenue from retreats, and a 65% reduction in force in late June. Similarly, COV-ID-19 forced Hazon to close its retreat center in Falls Village, Connecticut, and cancel a variety of programs. There was a loss in revenue, and many staff members had to be let go. Despite that, the merger is not due to job losses at either Pearlstone or Hazon, according to Manela.

“Both organizations have been and continu-

Hazon’s retreat center is fully booked for the rest of the year, and the organization has “strong program momentum going forward,” Savage said.

In spite of COVID-19, Manela said, Pearlstone has managed to reinvent itself, thanks to the work of its staff and supporters as well as The Associated. Programs have included an outdoor farm and forest school and an in-person summer camp. Since the beginning of the pandemic, the Pearlstone kitchen staff has provided about 100,000 meals to communities in need.

“Pearlstone has been able to adapt, pivot, show great resilience and, in some ways, grow our impact in a very different way,” Manela said.

For Baltimore to be the capital of this movement is really tremendous. It’s critical not just for our community but for communities everywhere.”

Savage believes that it will benefit the Jewish community to have a national organization headquartered in Baltimore — and not in New York, Los Angeles, Boston or Washington, D.C.

“Not only am I excited for the merger, but I think it makes sense,” Savage said. “The two organizations are almost twins with each other. This is really, really good for Baltimore.”

One practical that Hazon has made: “Less ob-sures,” Savage said, is shmita, or the seventh year of the seven-year agricultural cycle as required by the Torah.

During this period of rest for the land, agicultural and economic adjustments are made to promote health, equity and justice.

Keeping with shmita — which begins this Rosh Hashanah in September — is one reason that Savage told the Hazon board last summer that he wanted to step down as CEO by this August. In the days surrounding the announcement of the merger, British Columbia and Death Valley both hit record high temperatures. The changing climate is foremost on Savage’s mind.

“In the end, COVID is a kind of wake-up call to the American Jewish community, and to the world, about the need to plan for potential disruptions to human civilization,” he said. “And as huge as COVID-19 has been, it still pales beside the changes that a changing climate will bring.

“So as we merge with Pearlstone,” Savage said, “there are lessons to be learned and much work to do.”

Of course, Savage won’t be spearheading the future of Hazon. Starting in January, he will take a part-time role with the organization from Israel. This October, he plans to participate in Hazon’s Israel Ride from Jerusalem to Elat, which benefits the work of Hazon and the Arava Institute, one of the Middle East’s leading environmental academic and research institutions.

But Savage is confident in Manela, referring to him as a “superb leader.”

“There’s a lot of hope, excitement and understanding of the need,” he says. “But as we face within the Jewish community and across the planet, Manela said. “We’re ready to step in and seize the moment.”

A version of this story originally ran in the Baltimore Jewish Times via Mid-Atlantic Media.

Clara Silver takes job in South Carolina, continued from page 1

tor, said, “This agency is all about teamwork and collaboration, and Clara exemplifies that. She has worked with nearly every staff person and every Jewish agency and quite a few non-Jewish agencies as well. I know this commitment to collaboration will be part of her future success as the CEO of the KHC. I’m excited and proud that her work here propelled her to the next phase of her career.”

In April 2019, she completed the selective 18-month executive level “Leadership Training Institute,” presented jointly by the JCC Association of North American and Jewish Theological Seminary. Thus past April she received 1 Responder certification as part of the JCCA’s movement wide “1 Response” crisis response program, first deployed after Tree of Life Synagogue shooting in Pittsburgh. Prior to serving the Ann Arbor JCC, Silver was Executive Director of Hillel at Eastern Michigan University for seven years. Before enter-ning Jewish communal service full time, Silver managed a multi-million dollar portfolio of foreclosure properties for Edward Surovell Realtors.

Silver also served in Jackson, Michigan as pulpit chaplain and cantorial soloist for over 14 years, as well as a Jewish educator and curriculum consultant for synagogue religious schools in southeast Michigan. She has served on the boards of the Hebrew Day School of Ann Arbor and the Ann Arbor JCC, was PTO co-president while her daughter attended the American Hebrew Academy in Jerusalem, North Carolina, and has served in multiple volunteer leadership roles with the Girl Scouts Heart of Michigan council.

Joey Weisenberg, continued from page 1

include compilations of original niggunim as well as other songs and melodies. On his website joeyweisenberg.com, Joey writes that his “mission in life is to help create a more musically joyous and spiritually communing world for American Jews.”

Rabbi Ora Nitkin-Kaner, of the Ann Arbor Reconstructionist Congregation, first encountered Joey’s music in rabinical school. “I remember listening to his niggunim and being really moved by them.” She continues, “Niggunim, because they are wordless melodies … really dive down deep in our bodies and touch an elemental part of ourselves … I want everyone to have the opportunity to experience that.” When Detroit Jews for Justice held an online fundraiser earlier this year, Rabbi Ora noticed that an online concert/workshop with Joey Weisen-berg was one of the auction items. She bid on the workshop until she won, planning to offer it to the local Jewish community. Rabbi Ora says, “Joey creates incredibly gorgeous melodies … If you have never heard his music, this is a great opportunity to do so, a real treat.” This event is sponsored by The Ann Arbor Reconstructionist Congregation, Congregation Beth Israel, and the Ann Arbor Orhodox Association.

Join the song circle to draw strength from our collective voices and to lift you into the High Holiday season. Contact Gillian Jackson at aarcbiggs@gmail.com to register and receive the Zoom link.
JFS Presents

Inaugural Fundraising Walk

Join JFS in support of the diverse group that walk through our doors in need of help. Take a moment to walk a mile in their shoes. To learn more and register visit: https://jfswc.akaraisin.com/walkamile

Sunday, October 3, 2021
10:00AM-12:30PM
Temple Beth Emeth’s Big Tent

By Becky Hankin and Bette Cotzin

Temple Beth Emeth has a tent — both actual (erected during the pandemic outside the sanctuary building) and metaphorical! The tent is always open and there is a place under it for everyone. The TBE family and the talented, energetic, creative, and dedicated staff, including Rabbi Josh Whinston, Cantor Regina Hayut, Rabbi and director of education Daniel Alter, and executive director Melissa Sigmond, invite and direct of education Daniel Alter, and dedicated staff, including Rabbi Josh Whinston, Cantor Regina Hayut, Rabbi and director of education Daniel Alter, and executive director Melissa Sigmond, invite and director of education Daniel Alter, and executive director Melissa Sigmond, invite and director of education Daniel Alter, and executive director Melissa Sigmond, invite and director of education Daniel Alter, and executive director Melissa Sigmond, invite and director of education Daniel Alter, and executive director Melissa Sigmond, invite the community to come meet them.

TBE is a member of the Union for Reform Judaism, the largest and most diverse Jewish movement in North America. As a Reform congregation, TBE’s congregational family is founded on the values of warmth, togetherness, openness, belonging and caring, while embracing the diversity that is the reality of modern Jewish life.

Judah Perillo says, “From the get-go, TBE has made me feel welcome. The first time I attended was a Kabbalat Shabbat service, and I definitely stood out because I had bright blue hair at the time. The rabbis and cantor welcomed me personally, and many other congregants spoke to me as well. I felt immediately comfortable at TBE.” One member of TBE relates, “I’ve loved the ability to connect with a group of caring people. The TBE community was especially wonderful when our daughter became seriously ill. Everyone, at synagogue was so supportive — there was a meal train and people were so kind about offering help.” Member Beth Pearson notes, “Having an opportunity to meet up with the TBE young family group on a monthly basis helped our family grow ties to this community. My husband and I enjoy chatting with other parents while our kids play together.”

Even during the pandemic, TBE’s youth programming continued. There were opportunities from grades K to 12 to connect safely in person for creative activities, games, sports, and social activities. Youth groups Kadima (for middle school students) and TBE’s AARTY (Ann Arbor Temple Youth, for grades 9 to 12) bring young people together for fellowship and fun. Women of TBE (WTBE) is an active organization of women who come together for friendship, support, community, activism, learning and spiritual growth. And they love to cook and bake!

TBE values the full opportunity for members to express their spirituality and belief in God and places a high value on education for children and adults. A God-inspired living Torah enables congregants to confront current and timeless challenges of everyday lives.

TBE provides multiple options for worship and spirituality, as well as innovative and wide-ranging educational opportunities for both young people and adults. TBE hosts multiple services on Shabbat and holidays, both live and virtual, as well as Torah study, meditation, spirituality groups, book study, and other adult educational pursuits. Virtual daily blessings were instituted during the pandemic and continue to meet via Zoom. Worship is filled with music — cantorial, choral, and instrumental — a place to worship, to learn, to gather, to find common interests, to build new friendships, and to share celebrations, and to support one another when confronting challenges.

A long-time member, Jim Keen explains, “When my wife, Bonnie, and I were first married, we were in search of a congregation that provided a welcoming and warm sense of community. I am Protestant, Bonnie is Jewish, and we decided to raise our children Jewish. Therefore, we needed a synagogue that would be accepting toward all of us in our family. There is an open and friendly culture at TBE. As a member, I attend services, I have served on committees, and I’ve even been given the honor of Hagbah (lift- ing the Torah) on Rosh Hashanah. Temple Beth Emeth has also been the source of our family’s lifecycle events. Even when my Protestant father passed away last November, I knew I could count on TBE to be there for us. In an otherwise busy, unreliable world, it’s comforting to have a place we can go, knowing we are welcome and valued. Temple Beth Emeth is our home, our community, and our strength.”

If you would like more information about Temple Beth Emeth, explore their website www.templebethemeth.org, and call the office 734-665-4744, where you will find TBE values the full opportunity for members to express their spirituality and belief in God and places a high value on education for children and adults. A God-inspired living Torah enables congregants to confront current and timeless challenges of everyday lives.

TBE is committed to pursuing justice, wholeness, and compassion in the world. TBE’s Social Action Committee is one of its largest and most active groups of volunteers. Volunteers are active in many areas of social justice including, but not limited to, areas such as racial justice, civic engagement, anti-gun violence, LGBTQ+ rights, food insecurity, housing insecurity, immigration, and June-neath.

TBE has co-owned its building with St. Clare’s Episcopal Church since 1974 in a unique partnership called Genesis. The two congregations work together to support the Back Door Food Pantry, in addition to other areas of community collaborations throughout the year.

TBE strives to create a place in which those who are Jewish, Jewish-adjacent, or not engaged in Jewish life will find community — a place to worship, to learn, to gather, to find common interests, to build new friendships, to share celebrations, and to support one another when confronting challenges.

TBE Events in August

Events and services are both in-person and virtual. Please see www.templebethemeth.org for full details and links.

Families with Young Children Tot Shabbat
Fridays at 5:45 p.m.

Shabbat Service
Fridays at 7:30 p.m.

Saturday Shabbat service
Saturdays at 10:30 a.m.

Daily morning blessings
Daily at 9:15 a.m.
Join Rabbi Whinston each morning via Zoom for a short morning blessing.

Daily afternoon blessings
Mondays through Thursdays at 3 p.m.
Join Cantor Hayut each afternoon via Zoom for a short afternoon blessing.

Adult ’Bnai mitzvah classes
Mondays at 6 p.m. - CANCELLED August 23, August 30
Join Cantor Regina Hayut for an hour for either an afternoon session or an evening session. To join the class, or for more information, contact Cantor Hayut.

Women’s Torah study
Mondays at 7 p.m.
An in-depth study and lively discussion of the week’s Torah portion led by Cantor Regina Hayut. The group will explore various passages from the portion, looking at several translations and commentaries.

Twenty-five-minute mindfulness with Jewish spiritual director Linda Greene
Tuesdays at 8:30 a.m.
Zoom room opens at 8:15 a.m. for optional check-in. Blessing and intention setting 8:30–8:35 a.m. Meditate 8:35–9 a.m. Start your day centered and connected.

Talmud Tuesdays with Rabbi Alter
Tuesdays at 11 a.m. and 8 p.m.
Join Rabbi Alter to learn about the history of Rabbinical literature and some tremendous texts from Talmud!

Weekly Mahj
Weekly on Tuesdays at 7:30 p.m.
Weekly on Wednesdays at 1 p.m.

Meditation with Claire Weiner
Wednesdays at 5 p.m. - CANCELLED August 11 and August 18
Join Claire Weiner for a 40-minute meditation session

Biblical Book Club with Cantor Hayut
Sundays at 11 a.m. - On hiatus for the summer
Thursdays at 11 a.m.
For more information or questions, please contact Cantor Hayut.

Back Door Food Pantry
Thursdays, 4 to 7 p.m.

Weekly Lunch and Learn
Fridays at noon
Rabbi Whinston meets on Fridays for an informal discussion about religion. Sessions are open to the entire community. Feel free to bring your lunch.

Shabbat morning Torah study
Saturdays at 9:30 a.m.
Join us for this weekly discussion of the Torah portion led by Rabbi Whinston.

Havdalah from the Whinston Home
Saturdays at 7:30 p.m. - On Summer hiatus until 8/21

Rosh Chodesh Circle - Elul
Sunday, August 8 at 4:30 p.m.
Richard Wright book is BIC summer read

The Man Who Lived Underground by Richard Wright is BIC's 2021 Social Justice Book Series selection. The facilitated discussion will convene virtually on August 15 at 1 p.m., and the entire Beth Israel community is invited. Sunday Stroll for Adults (focus 55+) Sunday, August 22, 10:30 a.m. Get to know longtime and new members of the community by taking a stroll around Forschtenberg Nature Area. Register on the Beth Israel website.

Living Room Lectures – Michael Palmer Presents Eric Mendelsohn's Synagogues in America Sunday, August 22, 1 p.m. Artist and photographer Michael Palmer will talk about his book, Eric Mendelsohn's Synagogues in America, about the German-Jewish architect who planned to build seven synagogues in America, of which four were designed and built, all in the Midwest between 1946 and 1953. Michael Palmer has recorded in exquisite detail Mendelsohn's four built synagogues in Saint Paul, Saint Louis, Cleveland, and Grand Rapids. Please register on the Beth Israel website (www.bethisrael-aa.org).

Bite Size Shabbat at Burns Park Sunday, August 22, 7 p.m. Join us for all ages festive end-of-summer Kabballat Shabbat service featuring Motown inspired arrangements. featuring the music of Marvin Gaye, The Temptations, Stevie Wonder, The Four Tops and, of course, the Friday evening service. All are welcome. (Gathering policies available on the BIC website.)

Theology Book Club - Online Wednesdays, 8 p.m. Beth Israel Congregation's Theology Book Club welcomes you to join them to read together and discuss books on Jewish thought and beliefs. The books are in English. Contact Paul Shifrin at (248) 514-7256 for more information.

In Person and Online Services Evening Minyan – virtual only Sunday – Thursday at 7:30 p.m.
Friday Evening Services – In person and virtual Kabballat Shabbat Service at 6 p.m.
Shabbat Morning Services – In person and virtual Saturday at 9:30 a.m. ■

U-M School of Music, Theatre and Dance announces live and in-person season of ticketed performances

The University of Michigan School of Music, Theatre and Dance announced on July 15 its intention to return to produce live performances with the 2021-22 production season. Featuring ten fully-staged productions and one studio production, the season will run from September 30 through April 17, 2022. Information regarding performances by the major ensembles — including the annual Grand Night for Singing, Halloween Concert, Band-O-Rama, and Collage Concert performances — will be announced at a later date.

“arrot” says, “Memories of My Grandmother” follows the introduction of a new subscription package. The SMTD Flex Series will allow audiences to select the four shows they would like to attend at a discounted price. The Flex Series joins the existing Power Series, which allows audiences to purchase all four shows at the Power Center for the Performing Arts for a discounted price.

In addition to celebrating the return of live audiences, the school shall also be celebrating the 50th anniversary of the Power Center for the Performing Arts. This theatre has been the site for many university and community events, becoming a vital part of the cultural life of this region. The celebration acknowledges the many donors from the community who made its construction possible, especially the lead gift by the Power family, and its continued support.

Power Series renewals will begin on August 2; tickets and packages will be available on the Power Center’s public website on September 1. Details regarding box-office hours, updated ticketing policies (including seating updates and safety protocols) will be available soon at tickets.smtd.umich.edu.

Those interested in learning more about the upcoming production season are encouraged to sign up at https://myumi.ch/yKzMj. ■

AA Reconstructionist Congregation events in August

For more information about services or events or to receive zoom links, please e-mail: aarcgillian@gmail.com

AA Reconstructionist Congregation

The AARC book group will discuss The Lost Shtetl: A Novel by Max Gross. To participate virtually in services at Beth Israel, Beth Israel is now live streaming services on the Beth Israel YouTube channel (Beth Israel Congregation AA MI). All links will also be available on the Beth Israel homepage (www.bethisrael-aa.org). Please note that password-words are used. Contact the office to get the passwords at office@bethisrael-aa.org.

Passport to Shabbat: Greece
Get your virtual passports ready and join us as we travel to Greece during the month of August. Events include a screening of My Big Fat Greek Wedding (August 5), a Greek spanokopita cooking demo (August 10), and a discussion of the book The Thread (August 18). A variety of fun, new, and meaningful programs will bring our communities together. Register on the BIC website.

Bite Size Shabbat at Burns Park Saturdays at 11 a.m.
We are excited to partner with the Ann Arbor Orthodox Minyan for these gatherings to help Jewish families in Ann Arbor meet each other. There will be a short Tot Shabbat-style service at 11:30 a.m. Older siblings are encouraged to join.

Shabbat Morning Riddles and Chugs at Burns Park Saturday, August 7, 11:30 a.m.
Calling all 5-8 year olds at BIC. Meet your friends and see if you can solve the clues to the service. The program will end with kid-dash and a trip to the treasure chest!

Elul Concert with Joey Weisengan Sunday, August 8, 3 p.m.
Join BIC, AARC, and friends as the buzz and busy-ness of summer shifts towards the slower, deeper notes of inward-turning and busy-ness of summer shifts towards the Sunday, please email Greg Saltzman, gsaltzman@aalion.edu.

Elul Concert with Joey Weisenberg Sunday, August 8, 3 p.m.
Join AARC and friends as the buzz and busy-ness of summer shifts towards the slower, deeper notes of inward-turning and reflection. AARC’s Elul programming begins with a musical-spiritual Zoom concert with Joey Weisenberg, prolific composer, author, and director of Hadar’s Rising Song Institute. Between participatory niggunim, Joey will dip into his book, The Torah of Music, showing how singing is a spiritual practice accessible for all. Join the song circle to draw strength from our collective voice and lift you into the High Holiday season.

Second Saturday Morning Shabbat Service Sunday, August 15, 11:30 a.m. – noon.
The AARC book group will discuss Black Boy — and published in 1945 — and made it untouchable until now. The book is but his candid portrayal of police brutality that forced him to commit murder he did not commit. Forced to confess, Daniels escapes into the city’s sewer system on a journey into the dark heart of American culture, Wright’s companion essay, “Memories of My Grandmother,” follows Daniels’ story.

Wright considered this his finest work, but his candid portrayal of police brutality made it untouchable until now. The book is available at local bookstores; on Amazon; and on the website of its publisher, the Library of America, which discounts first purchases 10 percent at www.loboa.org. A donation of up to $10 is welcome but not required, to help defray costs. To register contact the BIC office.

Contact Amanda Glucklich at engage@bethisrael-aa.org with questions.

Richard Wright book is BIC summer read

The Man Who Lived Underground by Richard Wright is BIC’s 2021 Social Justice Book Series selection. The facilitated discussion will convene virtually on August 15 at 1 p.m., and the entire Beth Israel community is invited.

Sunday Stroll for Adults (focus 55+)
Sunday, August 22, 10:30 a.m.
Get to know longtime and new members of the community by taking a stroll around Forschtenberg Nature Area. Register on the Beth Israel website.
Dayenu helps build Michigan multi-faith delegation to treaty people gathering in northern Minnesota

By Deb Hansen

Solidarity between the efforts to stop Enbridge’s Line 3 oil pipeline expansion project and to decommission Line 5 at the Straits of Mackinac is growing as climate stability continues to unravel. In May, Line 3 indigenous water protectors, environmentalists, and climate activists traveled from Minnesota to Mackinaw City to participate in citizens’ eviction events after the Enbridge’s easement for Line 5 was revoked. (Yes, Line 5 is now operating illegally.) Then, in June, Michiganders got to return the favor by traveling to the Line 3 frontline as part of a multi-faith delegation. Many from the multi-faith delegation participated in non-violent direct action in sweltering temperatures.

The new Enbridge Line 3 is a massive tar sands pipeline that, if completed, would cause the equivalent environmental damage of 50 coal plants going online. The new Line 3 follows a different path than the existing Line 3, passing through hundreds of miles of treaty land that native communities depend on for drinking water and wild rice as a food staple. As with Line 5, resistance has been ongoing for seven years through official channels. Pipeline construction began December 2020 and is around 60% complete. Drilling beneath 100 waterways for pipeline crossings, including the headwaters of the Mississippi River, has recently begun.

Indigenous women have been leading the efforts to stop Line 3. GreenFaith and Minnesota Interfaith Power & Light were the primary organizers of the multi-faith delegation to support them. Dayenu helps build Michigan multi-faith delegation to treaty people gathering

The following morning began with Interfaith prayer at La Salle State Park. This larger action included a colorful march of around 2,000 people near the headwaters of the Mississippi. The Michigan multi-faith delegation participated in this action. It is a place of great natural beauty with dragonflies filling the skies. Knowing Enbridge would soon be drilling there was sobering. Those willing to risk arrest threaded their way across the marsh among the tussocks. Water damped shoes and cooled the body. This group then gathered on the platform of “skids” that will allow drilling equipment to move across these sensitive wetlands. There were no arrests and little police presence at this location which became Camp Firelight, an 8-day occupation by around 100 people.

The hotter action took place at an Enbridge pumping station where many locked themselves to heavy construction equipment. According to the RISE Coalition, the Water Protector Welcome Center, and others keeping the issue alive on social media.

3. Follow Giniw Collective, Honor the Earth, the RISE Coalition, the Water Protector Welcome Center, and others keeping the issue alive on social media.

4. Donate to and join the indigenous water protectors in Minnesota. Minnesota IPL will be leading prayerful action and visits to the Water Protector Welcome Center throughout the summer. Contact Julia Fritz-Endres, juliafe@mnipl.org, if you and your congregation or other group would like to visit.
We can’t help you climb the Sleeping Bear Dunes.

But we can help you bank anywhere.

High Holy Days Services

Temple Beth Emeth

Please see our website for upcoming details.

WWW.TEMPLEBETHEMETH.ORG

In-Person/Indoor and Virtual Traditional Services at Temple Beth Emeth

In-Person and Virtual Options for Family Services

In-Person/Outdoor Shofar Blowing & Tashlich Service

Please Join us!
Inspired Design. Excellent Craftsmanship. Delighting People & Planet.
Giraffe

Inspired Design. Excellent Craftsmanship. Delighting People & Planet.

giraffedesignbuild.com info@giraffedesignbuild.com 734.489.1924
Are you looking for a meaningful community connection?

The Women of Temple Beth Emeth invites you to join us!

The Women of Temple Beth Emeth (WTBE) strives to create a diverse community by welcoming and valuing the many voices, experiences, and identities of all women – regardless of temple affiliation.

What is so great about WTBE?

- Our members. Members have voice and hand in everything we do.
- Our programming. WTBE develop exciting new programs each year while preserving our community traditions.
- Our fundraising. WTBE provides world-class arts and entertainment, hands-on workshops, and Ann Arbor’s only Judaica gift shop – plus so much more – to support local, national and global initiatives promoting Reform Jewish values.

What’s missing?

YOU!!

For membership information, contact Cilla Tomas at wtbe@templebethemeth.org

Temple Beth Emeth 2309 Packard Street, Ann Arbor, MI 48105
An Unearthed Diary.
An Unforgettable Story.

The Girl in the Diary: Searching for Rywka from the Lodz Ghetto is a special exhibit based on a diary discovered in Auschwitz-Birkenau after WWII. It offers a moving glimpse into lives interrupted by the Holocaust. Created by the Galicia Jewish Museum in Krakow, Poland in cooperation with the Jewish Historical Institute in Krakow. Open now through December.
Feature

A one-of-a-kind biography of the woman behind the ‘All-of-a-Kind Family’ stories

Sandee Brawarsky, New York Jewish Week via JTA

In Sydney Taylor’s 1951 book “All-of-a-Kind Family,” a young girl says to her sister, “You’ll have to make up with her when Yom Kippur comes.”

The dialogue is revolutionary. Few novels of the time — let alone one aimed at a child- ren’s audience — would make so natural a reference to a Jewish holiday or, in this case, its relevance to everyday life.

“All-of-a-Kind Family” was the first from a mainstream publisher to highlight Jewish children. Set in 1912 and featuring the adventures of five sisters in a hardworking im- migrant Jewish family on New York’s Lower East Side, the book inspired a series that went on to sell millions of copies and re- mains in print.

I hadn’t read the “All-of-a-Kind Family” books since I was a kid and read them over and over. Last week I found four of the five volumes in the series in my local library and quickly went through them, remembering not only Ella, Henny, Sarah, Charlotte and Gertie but the connections my younger self felt had to each of them. To an adult read- er, Taylor’s sentences remain vivid and her dialogue crisp and realistic. Anyone with siblings will appreciate the way the young women grew up (and sometimes bickered but end up making amends by the end of the chapter).

Taylor helped Jewish children see people like themselves and their traditions in the pages of books, and bring Jewish culture to an American audience. She was ahead of her times in many ways, as June Cummins has shown in the first-ever biography of the award-winning author, “From Sarah to Sydney: The Woman Behind ‘All-of-a-Kind Family’” (Yale University Press), written with Alexandra Dunietz. Taylor’s was a life of a for- ward-thinking artistic expression.

Cummins researched widely and inter- viewed Taylor’s only daughter, Jo Taylor Mar- shall, and other relatives. Marshall granted her access to piles of Taylor’s materials in her New Jersey basement, including a locked trunk with diaries that Marshall had never opened.

The biography has a powerful back story: While working on the project, Cummins be- gan suffering from ALS and her health deteri- orated. When Cummins could no longer type or speak, she was able to dictate sen- tences using an eye-tracking communication device — she would look at a letter on a key- board to spell out words and then sentences. Her husband, Jonathan Lewis, told The Jewish Week that she had written more than half of the draft when he arranged for Dunietz, their friend, to help her. Dunietz, a historian who specializes in medieval Islam, had no particu- lar experience in Cummins’ field of study but was able to bring her historical sensibility to the project.

“June’s mind was as sharp as ever,” Dunietz said, a research scholar at the University of Chi- cago. The Jewish Week “noted her ‘grace and persistence’ in working letter by letter.”

The two would bounce ideas off each other as they finished the draft together and sent it off to Yale University Press.

Before her death in 2018 — after working just about every day during the previous two years — Cummins knew that the manuscript had been accepted. Dunietz then readied it for publication, trying to keep it in Cummins’ voice and style as much as possible.

“I know that for June, working on this al- lowed a part of her to flourish, when so much was being taken away. It was a privilege for me to be able to help her,” Dunietz said.

In the book’s introduction Cummins, a professor of English at San Diego State University who taught children’s literature, explains that she was drawn to Taylor as a sub- ject when she included “All-of-a-Kind Family” in her syllabus and noticed that very little had been written about her.

“I realized that Taylor was a transforma- tional figure not only in American children’s literature but in American Jewish life as well,” Cummins wrote. She adds: “Taylor’s semi-autobiographical books exemplified compli- cated issues of identity because their author’s life was rich with the possibilities of being a Jew in America.”

While “All-of-a-Kind Family” is set loving- ly on the Lower East Side, Cummins takes the reader further back into Taylor’s family’s history in turn-of-the-20th century Europe. Taylor’s mother, Cecilia Marowitz, known as Cilly, was well-educated and cultured, the daughter of a prosperous businessman in Bremen, Germany. Taylor’s father, Mor- ris Brenner, the grandson of Polish rabbis, came to Bremen in search of a better job and worked for the Marowitz family. The fami- ly’s history is full of surprises and dark twists: a daughter left behind with another relative, incest, an open extramarital affair.

In 1900, Cilly and Morris immigrated with their first child, settling on the Lower East Side.

Sarah, their third daughter, was born in 1904 when the family was living in a fourth- floor walk-up at 708 E. 5th St., just off Avenue C. That tenement building’s footprint is now part of a community garden, El Jardín Del Paraiso. During Sarah’s childhood, the street was jam-packed with multigenerational immi- grant families. Hardy anyone’s idea of Parai- so, paradise.

While the stories in the series are some- what autobiographical, as Cummins points out, they are selective in their representation, leaving out much of the hardship, poverty and trials experienced by the family.

The Brenner sisters got their famous nick- name in elementary school, when the princi- pal would single them out — all dressed alike, in clean, starched, handmade dresses with white-embroidered pinnafores and matching ribbons in their hair — to meet visiting digni- taries. A Chinese visitor said, “They’re all of a kind — an all-of-a-kind family”.

From the Lower East Side, the family moved uptown to the Bronx, where Sarah at- tended Morris High School, the city’s first “mixed high school, where boys and girls at- tended classes together.” At 14, she changed her name from Sarah to Sydney — as Cum- mins explains, she “wanted to be different and make a mark.”

Taylor had to leave high school before graduating in order to work and help support the family, but was intellectually engaged from point.

During the summer of 1950, while Tay- lor was at Camp Cejwin, Ralph saw a notice about a writing contest and submitted some of his wife’s stories about her family. She won, and that changed her career, their lives and per- haps the lives of millions of children. The Chicago publishing house Wilcox & Fel- lett gave her a prize of $3,000 in 1951 and a contract to publish the stories as a book.

Cummins details Taylor’s relationship with editor Esther Meeks, who continually tried to steer Taylor away from making the sto- ries too Jewish, or to adhere to Meeks’ own views of religion. (Meeks wasn’t Jewish and couldn’t understand that the holiday of Suk- kot could be lively and so much fun.)

With the success of the book and then the series, Taylor would travel to speak to librarians and students. She received much fan mail and answered every letter. While the books were major bestsellers and considered pathbreaking, the path to further publishing wasn’t always smooth, as her editors moved on and their successors had strong opinions as to what would sell.

Throughout her life, Taylor remained close to her sisters (who lent their real names to the girls in the books) and their husbands and were all close to Ralph’s family, and his parents worked in the Caswell-Massey store.

This accomplished biography combines interpretation of the stories with Taylor’s experiences and attitudes about marriage, women’s careers, politics and the arts. She was a hard-working perfectionist, resilient like her mother. All of the sisters were inde- pendent and several were modern like Tay- lor, yet all took care of their husbands and homes according to Cilly’s high standards and the expectations of their era.

After Taylor died in 1978, Marshall helped to name an award in Jewish children’s litera- ture in her honor. Today the Sydney Taylor Book Awards, under the auspices of the As- sociation of Jewish Libraries, are awarded annually to “outstanding books that authen- tically portray the Jewish experience.”

The awards have been expanded to sev- eral categories and among this year’s winners — awarded last week — are Leesia Neuman and Susan Gal, author and illustrator of “Welcoming Elijah,” a picture book set at Passover, and M. Evan Wolfenstein for “Turtle Boy,” a middle grades novel about a bullied bar mitzvah boy. Jo Taylor Marshall continues to support the awards in her mother’s memory.

In a conversation with The Jewish Week, Marshall said that Cummins was the first and so far only biographer to approach her about her mother. She has been in talks over the years about a new version of “All-of-a-Kind,” and still hopes that will happen.

Marshall recalled that her mother first came up with the “All-of-a-Kind” stories to teach her daughter Gertie about her family’s back- ground, as Marshall had only scant Jewish education. She remains grateful that her mother gave her a love of theater, dance, mu- sic, poetry and good writing. Now Marshall answers the fan letters.
Looking for Rose: Mr. Arnwine’s last chapter

Clare Kinberg, 20th installment of a series

Mark Vittert’s Reflections: Thanksgiving with Mambo Sauce

November 1982, St. Louis Business Journal.

In those days I didn’t have a credit card and I carried only a few bucks with me at any time. It was Thanksgiving night in 1970 and I was on my way out for dinner. It turned out later that everyone at our Indianapo-lis company had thought somebody else had invited me over. So I found myself without an invitation, going out to eat alone. I had all of four dollars with me.

As I walked into a snar-gashbord, the sign at the front door said, “Thanks-giving Special $5.95.” At that moment my hunger was only surpassed by how lonely I felt.

I went to a pay phone and called home to St. Louis. The family was having a big dinner with lots of friends. Mom told me how much everyone missed me and that she hoped I was having a good time. Frankly, I blinked twice and told her that I was invited to a friend’s home for Thanks-giving and that it would be warm and friendly and fun. As we said goodbye, I found myself standing on Meridian Street with four dollars and nowhere to go.

I tried a couple of more nice restaurants but my four dollars just wasn’t going to get me farther than the cranberry sauce. And then I remembered the ZEB’s. It was a big, neon sign over a conver-verted gasoline station. It said “ZEBS” with “Original MAMBO Sauce.” Original mambo sauce – I just had to see what this was.

It was stone empty inside. The smell of ribs was inviting and I yielded to a Thanksgiving dinner of barbecue and potato salad — if I could afford it.

Zeb was standing behind the counter.

About 60 years old with a look that reminded me of a relaxed Sonny Liston stare.

I said “Mr. Zeb, if that’s who you are, I’ve got four dollars and only four dollars for my Thanksgiving dinner. Give me whatever four dollars can buy.”

He scowled. “Is this your holiday night, out here all alone?”

“Yes.”

He stepped from behind the counter and went over and locked the front door. As he turned down toward me, he had softened. He said, “Young fella, let’s go in the back and re-ally have ourselves a Thanksgiving dinner. My wife died last summer and I’m alone too.”

Boy, did we have a feast. Zeb and I became good friends that year.

The next year, once again I found myself in Indianapolis for Thanksgiving. After everyone found out that no one had invited me out the year before, I was besieged with invitations for grand evenings all over town. But I already had plans.

Zeb and I had our second Thanksgiving dinner together.

Not long after Mark Vittert’s second Thanksgiving with him, Mr. Arnwine sold the restaurant and moved back to Chicago.

In November of 1976, Zebedee Arnwine died and is buried in an unmarked grave in Burr Oak Cemetery in Alsip, Illinois just outside Chicago. Burr Oak is also the resting place of Emmett Till and his family. On a trip to Chicago in June, 2021, my daughter and I paid respects to both of them.

On one of my first visits to Vandalia, I found a street named “Arnwine” running through a cottage subdivision on Paradise Lake. Soon, I had found the deed to the 25 acres Aunt Rose and Mr. Arnwine and two couples had bought that now has Arnwine Street running down the middle. I felt then that I had found the cornerstone to this story.

A piece of land.

One hundred and fifty years ago, a piece of the ancient Caddo people’s land in Cherokee County, Texas, on which Mr. Arnwine’s forebears had been enslaved, was willed to the Arnwines, and then stolen from them.

In my reading about the all Black post-Civil War towns founded in Cherokee County, I came across the indelible folkloric image of incomsemblable “Weeping Mary,” the for-merly enslaved woman who’d been swindled out of her land by a white man. Fifty years later, Mr. Arnwine married, then bloodied, Tamah Walker, daughter of a Creek freed-er woman who had struggled all of her life to maintain control of her Oklahoma land al-lotment. During the same period that Tamah and Zebedee’s marriage, white mobs burned and destroyed the “Black Wall Street” section of Tulsa, Oklahoma not far from where they lived.

This is the history that fills me as I think about Aunt Rose and Mr. Arnwine jointly owning land along the lakeshore in a Black resort and farming community in Michigan. This is the history that I think about as I pic-ture Aunt Rose alone with a raging husband, and as I read their 1957 divorce decree which states Mr. Arnwine had been found guilty of several acts of extreme and repeated cru-dely. The divorce papers assigned Aunt Rose sole ownership of the land on Paradise Lake.

Mr. Arnwine, the descendant of farmers, took his portable skills — cooking and en-trepreneurship — and moved to South Bend, then Indianapolis, then back to Chicago. He became an urban wanderer, or maybe that is how I understand it from my perch as the descendant of wandering Jews. My Aunt Rose, daughter of immigrant Jewish junk dealers, stayed put in a small community of Black farmers, and became a jobber, not of hardware and scrap metal like her father and brother, but of lakeside acre plots in a sub-di vision she named, “Arnwine Shores.”

The story I haven’t wanted to tell. Like the very fact of Rose — the miss-ing aunt I’d never met, whose existence I put aside at age 12 when I first heard reference to her — the fact that she was beaten by her husband was another piece of information I had to tuck away. I couldn’t let her status as an outcast — nor the information that her husband beat her — define my understand-ing of my aunt’s life. She had crossed the color line when it seemed to me, for our family, to be an unbreachable wall. She’d left St. Louis and not come back. She visited Aunt Mary in Chicago, but she always returned to Paradise Lake. What had she found there? I needed to know more about her life’s journey, includ-ing more about the man with whom she left St. Louis.

With persistence, luck, and the mystery of coincidence, I’ve accumulated a few stories about Mr. Arnwine. In the spring of 2021, as I was rushing around getting ready to fly down to Florida to visit my older daughter, I got a phone call from a Virginia number I didn’t recognize. As is my habit, I answered, “Hello, this is Clare.”

The hesitant voice at the other end said, “I didn’t expect you to pick up the phone. You’ve written about my grandmother in Oklahoma.” I sat down. It was 8:30 in the morning, April 16, 2021. I’d been publish-ing stories about Rose and Mr. Arnwine for a year and a half.

The woman on the phone had found the story I’d written about Mr. Arnwine’s early life in Muskogee, Oklahoma, and had identi-fied his second wife, Tamah Walker, as her grandmother. Speaking to me was Pastor Gay L. Gray, a writer and teacher offering online spiritual development courses. Ms. Gray’s mother was Tamah’s daughter from a subsequent marriage after she’d divorced Mr. Arnwine. She had never met her grand-mother or Mr. Arnwine, but has a very keen interest in her family’s history.

“Everything you wrote about my grand-mother — that her mother was an enrolled Creek freedwoman, that she’d been allotted valuable property when the tribal lands were broken up, that appointed white guardians tried to take away her land, that she had mar-ried Zebedee Arnwine in the early 1920s and had a daughter, Rebecca — all is true,” she told me. “My Aunt Rebecca, in her 90s, is still living,” she said, “and my own extensive research into my very multiracial and com-plicated genealogy confirms the story you wrote.” Somehow, her family had lost the land with the oil and gas underneath.

Ms. Gray was grateful that more people would know her family’s stories of land theft, but she also had more to say about Mr. Arnwine. Tamah Walker, she went on to tell me, had saved in a trunk a set of blood-stained clothes, her grandmother’s evidence that Mr. Arnwine, her husband, had beaten her in a dispute over the deed to the land allotment. Mr. Arnwine was not a good memory in her family. Ms. Gray wasn’t surprised that he’d moved on to marry a white woman and that he beat her, too.

“He was very bright,” she told me, ex-plaining she meant very light-skinned, in case I didn’t understand her meaning. From what she’d understood about him, Mr. Arnwine didn’t have a place in the world where he felt at home, or that he could call his own.

After this phone call with Tamah Walk-er’s granddaughter, something shook loose in my search for Mr. Arnwine and I came across another story of an older Zeb, who had, for a while anyway, found a place where he was remembered for his charm and gen-eosity. This other story about Mr. Arnwine was written in 1982 by Mark Vittert in his occasional newspaper column in the St. Lou-is Business Journal, which he co-founded. Though I hadn’t heard of him prior to finding this column, Vittert is a media entrepreneur now owner of the St. Louis Post Dispatch.

D

During my forty year search for Aunt Rose, I quizzed relatives I barely knew for clues to her life.

In the 1990s, I corresponded with an old-er cousin in Chicago who remembered Rose coming to her family’s Hyde Park apartment — more than once — in the middle of the night. My cousin Hallaine’s mother, my great aunt Mary, was the legendary rock of the family — kindhearted, dependable. For the St. Louis Kinbergs, going to Chicago always meant a visit to Aunt Mary.

Aunt Mary was my grandfather’s youn-gest sister, and only ten years older than Rose. If I had had the wherewithal to talk to Aunt Mary about Rose, I might know so much more. Aunt Mary’s daughter, Hallaine, told me she remembered, as a child, pecking around a corner while her mother and Rose conferred in the kitchen, Rose crying. With confidence in her childhood perceptions of the situation, Hallaine told me “ZEB’S. It was a big, neon sign over a converted gasoline station. It said “ZEB’S” with “Original MAMBO Sauce.” Original mambo sauce – I just had to see what this was.

It was stone empty inside. The smell of ribs was inviting and I yielded to a Thanksgiving dinner of barbecue and potato salad — if I could afford it.

Zeb was standing behind the counter.

About 60 years old with a look that reminded me of a relaxed Sonny Liston stare.

I said “Mr. Zeb, if that’s who you are, I’ve got four dollars and only four dollars for my Thanksgiving dinner. Give me whatever four dollars can buy.”

He scowled. “Is this your holiday night, out here all alone?”

“Yes.”

He stepped from behind the counter and went over and locked the front door. As he turned down toward me, he had softened. He said, “Young fella, let’s go in the back and re-ally have ourselves a Thanksgiving dinner. My wife died last summer and I’m alone too.”

Boy, did we have a feast. Zeb and I became good friends that year.

The next year, once again I found myself in Indianapolis for Thanksgiving. After everyone
Dining With The Family
Oct. 17, 2021

Announcing the return of everybody's favorite fundraiser (and friendraiser):
Dining With The Family!

SAVE THE DATE: Come together October 17 to connect, engage, dine, and raise significant dollars to support JFS's vital mission. We will feast at different homes and gathering spaces on meals donated by generous hosts. Register to be a guest at https://jfswc.akaraisin.com/diningwiththefamily starting August 16!

Now Seeking Hosts!!! Are you interested in hosting a brunch, lunch, or dinner? Sign up at https://jfsannarbor.org/diningwiththefamily.

For more information, contact Jodi Smolek at 734.237.6403 or jodis@jfsannarbor.org.

Movies in the Parks

15 nights, 5 parks and 13 different movies. Join us for drive-in style movies at your Metroparks starting in August.

Metroparks.com/Movies

Jewish Family Services of Washtenaw County
Doikayt Washtenaw

Prosecutor’s office, Washenaw My Brother’s Keeper, and Vera Institute announce partnership

The Washtenaw County Prosecutor’s Office and Washenaw County My Brother’s Keeper (WMBK) today announced a new partnership with the Vera Institute of Justice geared towards reducing justice-involvement for young men of color in Washtenaw County.

As part of its Reshaping Prosecution Program’s Motion for Justice initiative, Vera will provide WMBK with financial support to expand its successful Formula 734 program to young people who are at risk of involvement in the criminal legal system. Formula 734 is a program which engages young people to co-create hip-hop music, under the guidance of experienced mentors from WMBK.

My Brother’s Keeper is an initiative created by the Obama Administration that fosters connection between adults and young people of color. WMBK focuses on school readiness and success, preparation for college and career, and giving second chances to youth who have been justice-involved.

Under the program, young people who are not deemed to pose a public-safety risk will be given the opportunity to participate in WMBK’s Formula 734 program as an alternative to having criminal charges brought by the Prosecutor’s Office. As a condition for participation in the program, participants will be expected not to engage in criminal activity.

Young people will then have the opportunity to obtain marketable skills related to the music industry — including, potentially, journalism, event-promotion, videography, and photography skills — while working to co-create hip-hop music in partnership with experienced musicians. The music will be based on icebreakers and discussion prompts, grounded in restorative practices, that start each studio session.

Formula 734 is a WMBK initiative that released its first album last year. The partnership announced Tuesday will allow the program to expand, and include young people who are facing potential justice-involvement.

“Formula 734 was born out of my love for hip-hop and my desire to share this artform with Washtenaw County’s young (and young at heart) men of color,” said Jamall Buffett, Project Specialist for WMBK. “The work I’ve done leading up to Formula 734 revealed the many ways that hip-hop can be powerful—not only as fun artform, but also as a business industry and a therapeutic coping mechanism. My WMBK colleagues, Mike Henry and Rod Wallace, shared a similar vision.”

“When the Washtenaw County Prosecutor’s Office approached me with the idea of using Formula 734 as a diversion and deflection program to keep young Black and Brown people out of the criminal justice system, I jumped at the opportunity to partner with them,” said David Bufford, Executive Director of WMBK. “I support the Vera Institute of Justice, we’re excited to get this journey underway.”

Washenaw County Prosecuting Attorney Eli Savit echoed Buffett’s sentiments.

“The best thing we can do for young people is provide them with authentic mentorship opportunities, workforce development, and an opportunity to channel their passions into something positive,” Savit said. “Formula 734 provides all of these opportunities. We’re thrilled to partner with WMBK and Vera on this innovative, community-grounded program.”

As part of the Motion For Justice Program, the Vera Institute will also provide the prosecutor’s office with data analysis, staff training, community engagement support, and policy expertise to expand its understanding of the criminal legal system’s history of racial injustice and guide them toward a more equitable future.

“As a former prosecutor, I know the unique and immense power that prosecutors wield. They can either perpetuate the injustices of the current system or work to transform it. I am thrilled to partner with the Washtenaw County Prosecutor’s Office and WMBK to tackle the deep-rooted injustices that continue to plague our communities.”

Keeping our county safe: A critical look at Eli Savit’s sex work ordinance

By Michigan Abolitionist Project, Ann Arbor

Do you have children? Imagine that your children come to you when young and says, mom/dad, when I grow up I want to become a prostitute. Could you help me learn what I need to know about how to reach my goal? Do I need to go to college? Are there training programs? How would you as a parent feel? Excited? Proud? Would you want to support them in becoming a prostitute, selling sex multiple times a day to strangers that may or may not abuse, torture, strangle, burn, beat, stab, and humiliate them to fulfill their own sexual fantasies (92.2% of women in the sex trade reported experiencing at least one of these from a sex buyer)? In fact, interviews with sex buyers reveal that about half believe they can do what ever they want to those prostituted because they own what they pay for.

Research indicates that sex buyers are different from non sex buyers in that they do not see those prostituted as people, they lack empathy, and they are more sexually aggressive. So why would we as a community support the commercial sex trade as a viable employment? An industry fraught with abuse, misogyny, and exploitation of vulnerable marginalized people. Children do not aspire to become prostitutes. They do not choose to become prostitutes.

Additionally, there is no mandatory training for police officers in Washtenaw County to learn how to identify sex trafficking, making victim identification even less likely. He points to full decriminalization of the commercial sex trade as being safer for sex workers with respect to STIs, yet more violent outcomes continue to exist when not holding sex buyers accountable. The U.S. State Department Trafficking in Persons Report for January 2019, found New Zealand adopting a full decriminalization model continues to have a significant trafficking problem. “The government of New Zealand has noted that the identification of child sex trafficking victims have been hampered by the policy of full decriminalization was adopted.”

Savit cites every sex workers rights’ organization and anti-trafficking organization as supporting decriminalization of sex work. This is not true. Amnesty International and the WHO were advised by a pimp on the decriminalization policy who was later sentenced to 15 years in prison for sex trafficking. Their policy is also questionable due to reaching conclusions before conducting the research. A 2018 National Study of Sex Buyers in the U.S. found that high frequency buyers will only be deterred by a perceived risk of arrest.

The National Organization of Women (NOW) calls for the Equality Model. The most notable anti-trafficking organization in the United States, Polaris, which runs the Human Trafficking Hotline across the country and conducts research into human trafficking, has supported the Equality Model with an open letter denouncing decriminalization and supporting the partial decriminalization or Equality Model. In this letter, more than 350 survivors of sex trafficking and prostitution speak out against decriminalizing pimping and sex buying. Can didates for political office have been advised about their views on decriminalizing the sex trade and several cities and states around the country are now debating the issue. Survivors are the real experts. It’s high time we listened to them.

To be clear, we support decriminalizing people sold in prostitution, as we care deeply about their safety and well-being. We know all too well that marginalized groups are at higher risk for exploitation and therefore are especially vulnerable to the harms of the sex trade. But decriminalizing the sex trade in its entirety would have disastrous consequences. Do not be confused — full decriminalization means allowing pimping, sex buyers, and brothel owners to operate with impunity. Sex trafficking (including that of children) and organized crime increases when pimping and sex buying are legal. As a community, we cannot allow our history and medical experiences are essential to these discussions. We are eager to share our perspectives and have a productive dialogue with all Presidential can didates and others running for elected office. However, we will not be spoken for or have our voices hijacked by anyone claiming that traf ficking survivors support full decriminalization of pimping, sex buyers, and brothel owners. We will no longer stand by while our truths are misunderstood or misrepresented to support the misguided aims of the pro-prostitution “de facto” progressive political agenda.

The vast majority of survivors of prostitution and trafficking speak out against pimping and selling of vulnerable people and know firsthand that the best way to do so is to ensure that pimping and sex buying remain behaviors that aren’t encouraged or tolerated.

Savit declares that the Equality Model causes significant harm. He, like others pushing for full decriminalization, claims the Equality Model increases violence by sex buyers and pushes more underground activity. The nine French women engaged in prostitution that died from violent pimps after the Equality Model was implemented in France are horrific crimes, but there is no indication of causality to the Equality Model. Sex buyers are already violent. Pimps are already violent. The National Organization of Women states “you can’t legislate the violence from the industry of sex work. It is an inevitable outcome of the industry.”

Savit says he’ll gain the trust of those engaged in the commercial sex trade by not prosecuting those prostituted or sex buyers so they can be more open about getting help when needed. In fact, under the Equality Model, those engaged in the commercial sex trade would not have to fear prosecution and would be able to access help and services. The Equality Model supports those prostituted helping them gain access to education, employment, housing, psychological services, and medical care. “Advocates for the Equality Model reject the premise that prostitution is the world’s oldest profession and that there will always be a demand for it. They instead believe that prostitution is a dangerous and damaging form of exploitation. It is time to enforce penalties and fines on sex buyers, pimps and brothel owners while exempting from criminal liability those who are prostit uted or trafficked.” Let’s make Washtenaw County safe for our children, for our community and adopt the Equality Model!
Rabbi Yoel Kahn, Hasidic scholar who preserved Lubavitcher rebbe’s words, dies at 91

Andrew Silow-Carroll, originally for the JTA
Rabbi Yoel HaKohen Kahn, whose job was to memorize and transcribe the extemporaneous talks by the Lubavitcher rebbe, Menachem Mendel Schneerson, died on July 15. He was 91.

As the rebbe’s chief “chozer,” or oral scribe, Kahn was adept at the arts of memorization, repetition and transcription, according to Chabad.org. Schneerson would deliver lengthy, complex Torah homilies to his followers, and Kahn and a team of scribes would memorize them and submit them later to Schneerson for editing.

Kahn also was a scholar of Lubavitch and other Hasidic thought and a teacher at the Central Lubavitch Yeshiva. He was the lead editor of Sefer Ha’Arachim, an encyclopedia of Hasidic concepts.

Born in Moscow, Kahn immigrated to Mandatory Palestine with his family in 1935 and to New York City in 1950 to continue his studies at Lubavitch headquarters at 770 Eastern Parkway in Brooklyn.

Building a fence around your roof, physical and spiritual

By Rabbi Aharon Goldstein

This month we will begin our discussion with the parsha (Torah portion) of Ki Teitzei. We will be reading it in Deuteronomy 22:5 on August 21.

As a point of interest, this Torah portion has the most mitzvot of any portion in the Torah, 74 mitzvot. As we know, there are 613 mitzvot throughout the Torah. In some portions there are no mitzvot listed.

In others there are some mitzvot listed. But in this portion there are more than any other portion. The mitzvot we are going to be learning about when a person moves into a new house. It is required to erect a fence around the roof of the house. That’s why we are commanded to construct a fence around our roof.

Just like in the physical realm, we speak about a “fence”, it is something stronger than the person — that’s why it will prevent them from falling off the roof. And, just like a fence is stronger than a person, a person has to take upon themselves more stringencies, more protections in order to protect themselves when going out into the world. One has to conquer the world and not allow the world to conquer them.

So just like a physical fence, the same is true in the spiritual sense. The “fence” has to be a protection. In others there are more than any other portion. The mitzvot we are going to be learning about when a person moves into a new house. It is required to erect a fence around the roof of the house. That’s why we are commanded to construct a fence around our roof.

As we say, when we learn something in the Torah, there is a physical, practical application — there is also a spiritual and mystical interpretation. In our current example, the meaning of building a house and putting up a fence is no exception. How do we explain this in the spiritual sense? There is a time in life when a person goes out into the world to “build a new house.”

Meaning that if a person wants to go out into the world to get married and raise a family, it opens a new page in their life with new challenges. Until then, they were sheltered in a synagogue or a house of study which protected them from the negativity of the world. But when the time comes to go out into the world and build a new family, there are new challenges which require new energies to confront and overcome. So what is the remedy for this new stage in life? The Torah tells us to “build a fence around our roof.”

Meaning that one should add new restrictions, obligations, new commitments that will help keep one on course. One shouldn’t say that until now these extra precautions were not necessary and everything seemed to work out nicely. That was only true because the challenges of “building a new house” are different than when one is living a more protected life. Now when you have these new challenges, you have to overcome them by “putting up a fence.” This will prevent you from “falling off the roof” — meaning to fall from one’s spiritual well-being.

This concept of building a new house does not only refer to one’s getting married and starting a new family life. It can be interpreted on a daily basis as well. Every morning when you get up and start out in a very holy setting by praying, studying Torah and other holy actions. Then, when you are finished with that segment of the day, you have to go out into the world to make a livelihood, etc. and this is an environment that could be challenging to your values and beliefs. That’s why the Torah says you have to make this fence. This fence will protect you from “falling,” spiritually, and you will be able to maintain your standards on the spiritual level.

Now what does it mean to “build a fence”? Just like in the physical realm, when we speak of a fence, it is something stronger than the person — that’s why it will prevent them from falling off the roof. And, just like a fence is stronger than a person, a person has to take upon themselves more stringencies, more protections in order to protect themselves when going out into the world. One has to conquer the world and not allow the world to conquer them.

In conclusion, we’re suggesting that when it comes to doing a mitzvah, to beautify the mitzvah, to do it with greater enthusiasm and more meticulous care, to add more things than one normally would, and not to do what is prohibited. Until now life worked well without adding these extra things, but now since there are new challenges to face, one has to be more scrupulous about what is permitted and what is not permitted.

The Previous Rebbe, Rabbi Yosef Yitzchak from Lubavitch, used to instruct people that on Rosh Hashanah they should take upon themselves an extra stringency, an extra beautification of a mitzvah. He said that since on Rosh Hashanah a new revelation of God is revealed and we are starting a new year, we can say it is like starting out in a new house where we need to do some extra things — extra resolutions. Through this, one builds a strong house that will be fortified with Torah and mitzvos.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Sunday 1</td>
<td>Rosh Hodesh Elul: Delve into the basic text of Chassidism and discover the beauty and depth of Judaism. 11 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monday 2</td>
<td>Adult B’nai Mitzvah Class: TBE. 6 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Women’s Torah Study: TBE. For questions, contact Cantor Regina Hayat at cantorhayat@templebethemeth.org. 7 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tuesday 3</td>
<td>Twenty-five minute Mindfulness with Jewish Spiritual Director Linda Greene: TBE and Pardes Hannah. 8:30 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Talmud Tuesdays w/ Rabbi Alter: TBE. 11 a.m. and 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tea and Torah on Tuesday—for Women: Chabad. 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wednesday 4</td>
<td>Yiddish tsih (Virtual) (Yiddish Conversation &amp; Reading Group): Zoom. About 45 minutes each of conversation and reading. Free and open to all those interested in Yiddish language, literature, and culture, no matter what level of proficiency. For more information, to get the link, and to make certain that we are meeting on a specific day, please e-mail Elliot H. Gertel at egertel@umich.edu at least one day before scheduled meeting day every Wednesday (except major Jewish holidays). 2 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Meditation with Claire Weiner: TBE. 5 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>THEOLOGY Book Club: BIC. Online 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thursday 5</td>
<td>Love at the Center: Pardes Hannah. 7:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Talmud—Jewish Civil Law: Chabad. 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friday 6</td>
<td>Candle Lighting 8:30 p.m. Rech   Lunch and Learn: TBE. Zoom. Rabbi Whinston meets on Fridays for an informal discussion about religion. Noon – 1 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>First Friday Shabbat: JCS. Secular Jewish readings, singing, candle lighting, challah and wine rituals, and a Yahrzeit observance to remember loved ones. Children are welcome. 6:30-7:30 p.m. Registration required: jewishculturalsociety.org. For more information: 734-975-9872 or info@jewishculturalsociety.org. 6:30-7:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saturday 7</td>
<td>Havdallah 9:22 p.m. Torah Study: TBE. Zoom. Weekly discussion of the Torah portion led by Rabbi Whinston 8:50-9:50 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Second Saturday Shabbat Morning Service: AAC. Ta’Shoma: Come and Learn at 10 a.m. Service 10:30 a.m to noon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bite Size Shabbat at Burns Park: BIC 11 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sunday 8</td>
<td>Rosh Hodesh Elul Musical Hallel and Bagels: AAOM. 9 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Book Group: AARC. The Lost Shetl: A Novel by Max Gross. For info email Greg Saltzman, gsaltzman@yahoo.com. 11:30 to 1 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tanya–Jewish Mysticism: Chabad. Delve into the basic text of Chassidism and discover the beauty and depth of Judaism. 11 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Elul Concert with Joey Weisenberg: AARC and others. Zoom concert with composer, author, and director of Hadar’s Rising Song Institute. 3 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Rosh Chodesh Elul: TBE. 4:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monday 9</td>
<td>Rosh Hodesh Elul Adult B’nai Mitzvah Class: TBE. 6 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Talmud Circle Elul: Pardes Hannah. 7 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Women’s Torah Study: TBE. For questions, contact Cantor Regina Hayat at cantorhayat@templebethemeth.org. 7 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tuesday 10</td>
<td>Twenty-five minute Mindfulness with Jewish Spiritual Director Linda Greene: TBE and Pardes Hannah. 8:30 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Talmud Tuesdays w/ Rabbi Alter: TBE. 11 a.m. and 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tea and Torah on Tuesday—for Women: Chabad. 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wednesday 11</td>
<td>Yiddish tsih Conversation &amp; Reading Group: Every Wednesday, see above. 2 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Passover to Shabbat: Spanakopita food demo: BIC. Join BIC’s chef Amanda Fisher to learn how to make this delicious feta, spinach and cheese-laden dish. 5:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tea and Torah on Tuesday—for Women: Chabad. 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thursday 12</td>
<td>Love at the Center: Pardes Hannah. 7:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Talmud—Jewish Civil Law: Chabad. 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friday 13</td>
<td>Candle Lighting 8:20 p.m. Shofet    Lunch and Learn: TBE. Zoom. Rabbi Whinston meets on Fridays for an informal discussion about religion. Noon – 1 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Passover to Shabbat: Culture Connection: Greece: BIC. A pre-Shabbat gathering to learn about Jews in different places around the globe. 5:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saturday 14</td>
<td>Havdallah 9:22 p.m. Torah Study: TBE. Zoom. Weekly discussion of the Torah portion led by Rabbi Whinston 8:50-9:50 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Second Saturday Shabbat Morning Service: AAC. Ta’Shoma: Come and Learn at 10 a.m. Service 10:30 a.m to noon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bite Size Shabbat at Burns Park: BIC 11 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sunday 15</td>
<td>Tanya–Jewish Mysticism: Chabad. Delve into the basic text of Chassidism and discover the beauty and depth of Judaism. 11 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Beth Israel Reads: BIC. Facilitated discussion of Richard Wright’s The Man Who Lived Underground. 1 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tuesday 24</td>
<td>Twenty-five minute Mindfulness with Jewish Spiritual Director Linda Greene: TBE and Pardes Hannah. 8:30 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Talmud Tuesdays w/ Rabbi Alter: TBE. 11 a.m. and 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tea and Torah on Tuesday—for Women: Chabad. 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wednesday 25</td>
<td>Yiddish tsih Conversation &amp; Reading Group: Every Wednesday, see above. 2 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Meditation with Claire Weiner: TBE. 5 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Theology Book Club: BIC. Online 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thursday 26</td>
<td>Love at the Center: Pardes Hannah. 7:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Talmud—Jewish Civil Law: Chabad. 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friday 27</td>
<td>Candle Lighting 7:59 p.m. Ki Tavo   Lunch and Learn: TBE. Zoom. Rabbi Whinston meets on Fridays for an informal discussion about religion. Noon – 1 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Motown Shabbat: BIC. Join us for an all-ages festive end-of-summer Kabbalat Shabbat service featuring Motown inspired arrangements, featuring the music of Marvin Gaye, The Temptations, Stevie Wonder, The Four Tops and, of course, the Friday evening Service. All are welcome. (Gathering policies available on the BIC website.) 7 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Selichot: Pardes Hannah. 8:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Fourth Friday Kabbalat Shabbat: AARC. Hybrid, outside at the JCC and online. 6:30 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saturday 28</td>
<td>Havdallah 8:58 p.m. Torah Study: TBE. Zoom. Weekly discussion of the Torah portion led by Rabbi Whinston 8:50-9:30 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Bite Size Shabbat at Burns Park: BIC 11 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sunday 29</td>
<td>Cooking with Rabba Yael: BIC. A chance for kids to learn about simanim for Rosh Hashana. 9:30 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tanya–Jewish Mysticism: Chabad. Delve into the basic text of Chassidism and discover the beauty and depth of Judaism. 11 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monday 30</td>
<td>Women’s Torah Study: TBE. For questions, contact Cantor Regina Hayat at cantorhayat@templebethemeth.org. 7 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thursday 31</td>
<td>Twenty-five minute Mindfulness with Jewish Spiritual Director Linda Greene: TBE and Pardes Hannah. 8:30 a.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Talmud Tuesdays w/ Rabbi Alter: TBE. 11 a.m. and 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Tea and Torah on Tuesday—for Women: Chabad. 8 p.m.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Phone numbers, websites and addresses of organizations frequently listed in the calendar:

- Ann Arbor Orthodox Minyan (AAOM): 1429 Hill Street, 734-488-3269, annarborminyan.org
- Ann Arbor Reconstructionist Congregation (AARC): 2925 Birch Hollow Drive, 734-445-1915, aarccon.org
- Beth Israel Congregation (BIC): 2000 Washtenaw Ave, 734-665-9879, bethisrael-aa.org
- Chabad House: 715 Hill Street, 734-995-3276, jewmich.com
- Frankel Center: 202 S. Thayer St., lsa.umich.edu/judaic/
- Jewish Community Center (JCC): 2925 Birch Hollow Drive, 745-971-0990, jccannarbor.org
- Jewish Cultural Society (JCS): 2925 Birch Hollow Drive, 734-975-9872, jewsociety.org
- Jewish Family Services (JFS): 2245 South State, 734-677-0209, jccannarbor.org
- Jewish Federation: 2939 Birch Hollow Drive, 734-677-0100, jewishannarbor.org
- Pardes Hannah: 2010 Washtenaw Ave, 734-761-5324, pardeshannah.org
- Temple Beth Emeth (BTE): 2309 Packard Road, 734-665-4744, templebethemeth.org
- UM Hillel: 1429 Hill Street 734-769-0300, michiganhillel.org
T his summer has been a joy. There is a spirit of “everything will be ok” and “we are kinda/sorta back to normal.” One thing that hasn’t returned to normal for me is cooking for more than two. I’m still cooking mainly for Ron and myself.

I confessed to a group of friends that I haven’t really missed preparing large quantities of food for large numbers of people. Although it took a few times to get comfortable being in a large group, I’m enjoying spending time with family and friends. Still, the group visits have sapped my energy and I just want to go home where it was quieter. I really hope that others have felt the same way, and I’m not being too weird.

Despite these confessions I have been excited about the bounty from our garden and the farmer’s market. The fresh produce and the fruits of summer loved the rain we had in July. Let’s try and keep hold of how tasty the food is when we head back into winter. Meanwhile, my husband and I have been eating primarily plant-based meals. We are not vegan nor vegetarian, but we’ve definitely increased the food is when we head back into winter.

I’ve been making whole grain salads all summer. I learned I still don’t like barley or bulgur and I really like farro. They are easy, healthy and tasty. What’s not to like about a dish like this? It’s easy to riff on by swapping out the farro for bulgur, wheat berries, or beans. Add in chopped vegetables you like and use a dressing you like. Here’s what I did. 2 cups farro (I bought a package of Bob’s Red Mill Farro and cooked according to the directions on the package). Cut up cucumbers, green onions, halved cherry tomatoes — I used 1 large cucumber and 2 green onions and about 12 cherry tomatoes.

Fresh mozzarella balls — the little ones Herbs — I put in dill and basil, but you could try parsley and mint.

Dressing — keep it simple with some fresh lemon juice and a little olive oil, salt and pepper.

This was so simple. Just rinse the 2 cups of farro then add it to about 6 cups of boiling water with a handful of salt. Lower the temperature of the pot from high to medium or even lower. You want to keep the grain boiling but not boiling over. Check it for doneness at about 20 minutes but it might take a bit longer. It should be chewy, not mushy. Let it cool a bit before you add in the vegetables because you don’t want to cook them. Add in the herbs and some fresh mozzarella. Add the dressing and stir to combine.

Farro Salad

I’ve been making this salad based on a recipe from Alison Roman’s book Eating In. Here is my riff on a 5-minute prep and a delicious, satisfying salad. This could work with nec-tarines or peaches as well. In fact, I bought 25 pounds of Georgia peaches from The Peach Truck and need to finish processing them (freezing, it’s the easiest), make some jam, or put them over with spiced greens with burrata. If you haven’t heard of The Peach Truck, look it up and put it in your calendar to order some next year.

2 to 4 servings.

3 tangerines — peeled and separated into segments and each segment sliced into halves

Burrata cheese — it comes in a container with two balls. I used one.

Spicy greens — several cups of salad mix, arugula or your choice

1 red onion, sliced and left in 1 tbs lemon juice for about 5 minutes. I actually used about 1/4 of the onion

1 tbs olive oil

Salt and pepper to taste

This salad couldn’t get any easier. Slice up the red onion or as much of it as you want and add 1 tbs fresh lemon juice. Peel and sepa-rate the tangerine segments and cut them in half or thirds, depending on how big they are. Tear up the burrata cheese into smaller pieces and mix in with the tangerines. Fill a bowl with spicy greens like arugula, or a mix of lettuces if you don’t like spicy. Add the lemon juice and red onion and mix together and then put the tangerines and burrata on top. You can add a little olive oil and stir everything together or leave it in the layers.

The tangerines add their citrus juices to the salad and the whole thing is delicious with the contrasts of sweet and spicy.

Family, friends, and I don’t really feel like cooking

Lottie Sussman, special to the WJN

One thing that hasn’t returned to normal for the course of the last year, I made the burgers with chicken and we loved them. Recently I made a new version I found online and then saw a similar version in a cookbook by Angela Liddon, Oh She Glows. All I can say is it might be life changing. The key ingredients in bean-based burgers (say that three times very fast) are chopped and sauteed mush-rooms. When they are added to onions, or shallots and garlic and sauteed in a little olive oil, yum. Some of the recipes also add a table-spoon or 2 of Tamari and Balsamic to up the flavor. Some also use walnuts or cashews in the mix or seeds like chia to add heft and texture. But the really important ingredient is short grain brown rice. It helps the patties stay together even without eggs.

Smoky Black Bean and Brown Rice Veggie Burgers

Oh She Glows by Angela Liddon

1/2 cup uncooked short grain brown rice

1/4 lb olive oil

3 tbs minced garlic

4 cups roughly chopped cremini or a mix of cremini and portabellas (12-16 oz.)

Salt and pepper to taste

1 1/2 tbs olive oil

1 cup panko style breadcrumbs

1/2 cup pepitas or sunflower seeds (optional)

1/2 tsp smoked paprika (I use regular paprika)

A pinch of dried chili peppers or to your taste

2 tbs tomato paste

1/2 cup stock or water

1 cup dry, full bodied red wine

Heat a large nonstick skillet and add the butter and oil. Turn the heat up to high and wait for the butter foam to subside. Dredge the fillets in the flour and place them in the skillet flesh side down. Season with salt and pepper, brown the fillets quickly on one side and then remove them from the pan and place on a plate, flesh side up. You can keep them warm in the oven while you make the sauce.

Add the onion, garlic, and carrot to the pan and stir until the onion softens. Add half the parsley, and some more salt and pepper to taste. Add the stock or water, raise the heat to high and reduce the liquid until it is almost evaporated. Add the wine and reduce the sauce by about half. Return the fillets to the pan, skinned side down and cook over medium heat until the fillets are cooked through (about 3-5 minutes). Sprinkle with remaining parsley and serve immediately.

Salmon Fillets in Red Wine Sauce

FISST by Mark Bittman

Serves 4

Now that we are reentering into social relationships and maybe inviting friends over for dinner, we could try this beautiful dish. My friend, Diane V., allowed me to taste her version of this which she made with char rather than salmon and served it with rice made with mushrooms and green peppers.

2 tbs butter

1 tbs olive oil

4 skinned salmon fillets

Flour for dredging the fillets

Salt and pepper to taste

1 medium onion, diced

2 cloves minced garlic

1 medium sized carrot, cut into small dices

1/4 cup parsley

1/4 cup stock or water

1 cup dry, full bodied red wine

Add the onion, garlic, and carrot to the pan and stir until the onion softens. Add half the parsley, and some more salt and pepper to taste. Add the stock or water, raise the heat to high and reduce the liquid until it is almost evaporated. Add the wine and reduce the sauce by about half. Return the fillets to the pan, skinned side down and cook over medium heat until the fillets are cooked through (about 3-5 minutes). Sprinkle with remaining parsley and serve immediately.

Beans

I’ve used the dry beans you can get at By the Pound or in packages at other markets and I’ve used the canned varieties. While I think the dried and then soaked and cooked beans seem creamier and have a little more taste, the canned beans are so convenient to use.

Some food writers encourage rinsing the canned beans to get rid of a “canned” taste, but after several experiments, I disagree. Some of the canned bean liquid is useful for adding some flavor but I usually drain off half of it so that the salads aren’t so “gloppy.”

No Work Bean Salad

Open a can of beans and place in a bowl. I used Great Northern Beans and really liked their soft texture and mild flavor. Add sliced radishes, some chopped up dill, a sprinkle of rice vinegar, 2 dashes of salt and enjoy. Now, go crazy and add other chopped vegetables, a different type of vinegar, parsley or basil and some mozzarella. I’ve made this for breakfast several times. It’s so refreshing and delicious.

A Little More Work and You Have a Veggie Burger

I know that some of you (and me) have used the NTimes version made with beers. Over the course of the last year, I made the burgers with chicken and we loved them. Recently I made a new version I found online and then saw a similar version in a cookbook by Angela Liddon, Oh She Glows. All I can say is it might be life changing. The key ingredients in bean-based burgers (say that three times very fast) are chopped and sauteed mush-rooms. When they are added to onions, or shallots and garlic and sauteed in a little olive oil, yum. Some of the recipes also add a table-spoon or 2 of Tamari and Balsamic to up the flavor. Some also use walnuts or cashews in the mix or seeds like chia to add heft and texture. But the really important ingredient is short grain brown rice. It helps the patties stay together even without eggs.

Kosher Cuisine
Presented in part with grant support from:

Summer of Love
created by Roger Bean

August 19, 20, 21
@7:00 p.m.
Burns Park

Tickets & Info: www.pennyseats.org
Esther Bejarano, member of Auschwitz orchestra, dies at 96

Ron Kampeas, originally for JTA

Esther Bejarano played music while she watched fellow Jews marched to their deaths, and then it used decades later to make sure the crimes she suffered and witnessed would never be repeated.

Bejarano, a member of the so-called Auschwitz orchestra, died peacefully July 10 at the Jewish hospital in Hamburg, Germany. She was 96.

The day after her death, crowds gathered at Platz der Bücherverbrennung in Hamburg, where she last performed, to honor her.

Bejarano, born Loewy, was born in 1924 in French-occupied Saarlos, a town the Nazis reclaimed in 1935. After her sister and her parents were killed by Nazis, Bejarano was working hard to get into Auschwitz in 1943 when she heard there was a 40-woman orchestra at the camp and that they needed an accordionist. Trained as a pianist, she volunteered, although she did not know how to play the accordion.

The Nazi commandants established the orchestra to dull incoming Jews into false confidence. “You knew that they were going to be gassed, and all you could do was stand there and play,” she told Deutsche Welle in 2014.

She moved to Israel after the war and married and had children, and trained as a singer.

She moved back to Germany in the 1970s, according to Deutsche Welle, because of her husband Nissim’s health. She chose Hamburg because she had no history with the city, although she could not help but wonder if passersby were among her persecutors.

“When I saw people who looked a bit older than me, I always wondered whether they had perhaps been the murderers of my parents and myself,” she said.

In 1986, alarmed by a resurgence of antisemitism in German, Bejarano helped found the Auschwitz committee to give survivors a platform to speak to youths and to media about their experiences.

“It is my revenge that I go to the schools, that I tell people what happened back then,” the BBC quoted her as saying. “So that nothing like that can ever happen again.”

She used music to spread the word. She formed a band called Coincidence, with her children, Edna and Jordi, that played Yiddish melodies and Jewish resistance songs. At times, she took up the accordion.

In 2010, a popular German hip hop group, Microphone Mafia, approached her and asked her to team up to perform music with an anti-fascist message. Then 85, she readily agreed.

“It’s a clash of everything: age, culture, style,” Bejarano, told The Associated Press at the time. “But we all love music and share a common goal: we’re fighting against racism and discrimination.”

Robert Henry Seeman passed away April 8 at St. Joseph Mercy Hospital. He was born November 14, 1932 in the Bronx, NYC to William and Betty (Nekritz) Seeman.

He grew up in Queens, New York and attended Queens College. After graduation, he served as a Medic with the US Army in Korea.

After leaving the Army, he studied at the University of Michigan and received a Master’s degree in Speech Pathology. In 1958, he started working with the Commission on Professional and Hospital Activities retiring 34 years later in 1992. While at CPHA, he spent some time working with the World Health Organization in Geneva, Switzerland and published a report in 1989.

In memoriam: Herb Sturz, a modest giant among advocates

Herb Sturz, a social justice legend who devoted his life to public service and who served as Vera Institute for Justice’s leader from its founding in 1961 through 1978, passed away on June 8. He was 90 years old.

Herb was a modest giant among advocates. His work touched countless lives, and his mobilization led to some of the most important criminal justice reform movements of our time — from the curtailment of stop and frisk to the push to close New York City’s formidable Rikers Island jail complex — but many have never heard his name. He was inconspicuous about working behind the scenes to better the lives of others. Although he has been the recipient of dozens of honors and recognition. It was about the humanity in our time — from the curtailment of stop and frisk to the push to close New Y ork City’s overreliance on cash bail.

More than 60 years later, his advocacy and commitment has led to the creation of dozens of organizations dedicated to helping millions of people both locally and around the world. Because of Herb and Vera, the Addiction Research Treatment Corporation, Safe Horizon, the Legal Action Center, Mobilization for Youth Legal Services, Pioneer Messenger Corporation, Wildcat Service Corporation, the Neighborhood Youth Diversion Corporation, the Manhattan Court Employment Project, La Bodega de la Familia, the Harlem Defender Service, the Center for Alternative Sentencing and Employment Services, the Center for Employment Opportunities, the City Volunteer Corps, the Midtown Community Court, Red Hook Community Justice Center, the Center for Court Innovation, the After-School Corporation, and the Center for New York City Neighborhoods — just to name a few — were born. Among other projects, Herb’s advocacy also helped to launch Easyride, the forerunner of Access-A-Ride, to provide transportation to the elderly and people with disabilities in New York City.

Herb and Louis’s original undertaking, dubbed the Manhattan Bail Project, was the first meaningful criminal legal system reform program the country had ever seen. Herb knew that no one should see their way to freedom, and his efforts showed others the same. The project was replicated in dozens of cities across the country and ultimately led to the landmark National Bail Reform Act of 1966.

On December 31, 1977 — Herb’s 47th birthday — New York City Mayor-elect Ed Koch called Herb at home to offer him a job as deputy mayor for criminal justice. While in his new role, he continued to pioneer efforts to close Rikers, recognizing the toll of today, Vera — arguably the most sweeping of Herb’s achievements — is headquartered in Brooklyn and has offices in Los Angeles, West Palm Beach, and Washington, DC. The organization has worked on hundreds of projects both nationally and abroad to shrink and transform the criminal legal system and to this day advocates to end injustices, including cash bail, that continue to harm millions. Mass incarceration and the need to invest resources in services that would benefit communities.

As the chairman of the City Planning Commission, Herb developed a number of neighborhood planning initiatives, including an Arson Strike Force, which sought to combat the epidemic of fires ignited by tenants in low-income neighborhoods. Later, he worked on reentry programs like Single Stop, which ensures that incarcerated people get access to the federal and state benefits they are owed, and served on the editorial board of the New York Times. In its pages, he advocated for expanding Medicare and other social reforms.

Herb was a listener. He spent time with people incarcerated on Rikers Island and advocated for what they actually needed — aid and access to employment, education, and housing — to keep them out of the system. Even in his last few years, he continued to attend monthly meetings to close Rikers, leading to the historic city council vote in 2019 to close Rikers.

Herb was a modest giant among advocates to end injustices, including cash bail, that continue to harm millions. Mass incarceration and the need to invest resources in services that would benefit communities.
Apply now for the 2022 Ann Arbor/Nahalal student exchange

Liora Rosen

The Jewish Federation of Greater Ann Arbor is now accepting applications for the 2022 Ann Arbor/Nahalal Student Exchange trip, shares that, in the past, "I’d only gone to Israel to visit family, so going to be with Israeli kids that I knew nothing about was a unique experience that I had never done before. The kids from Ann Arbor and Nahalal made strong bonds in only 10 days, so now I don’t just have a family in Israel, but friends too." Ann Arbor teens will have the opportunity to reciprocate the visit by hosting their Israeli peers later in 2022. Students who are in tenth grade will host during Passover, and ninth graders during Sukkot in 2022.

The Ann Arbor/Nahalal relationship is an integral part of the Michigan/Central Galilee Partnership2Gether project. The two communities have developed a deep connection based on mutual values and shared interests, such as environmental and ecological conservation, social justice, and diverse and creative religious expression. For more information, please contact Liora Rosen at liora@jewishannarbor.org.

Simchas and Sorrows

The Washtenaw Jewish community sends condolences to:

Marina Seeman on the death of her husband Robert Seeman April 8.
The family of Mahala Edwards, grandmother of Susan (Dave) Ostreicher and great-grandmother of Solomon, Esther, and Morris Ostreicher, July 7.
The family of Mark Solent, who died on July 14.

The Washtenaw Jewish community sends mazal tovs to:

Hannah Kaplan on her Bat Mitzvah, June 5
Sylvie Bleckman on her Bat Mitzvah, June 5
Maya Hammerman on her Bat Mitzvah, June 12
Jacob Carbone on his Bar Mitzvah, June 26
Romi and Stu Simon, on the engagement of their daughter, Bari Lynn Simon to Michael Tullis
Helaine and David Reid, on the engagement of their daughter, Stephanie Reid to Jonathan Mershimer
David Uhlmann, on his nomination by President Biden for Assistant Administrator for Enforcement and Compliance Assurance at the Environmental Protection Agency
Rachel and Gary Glick, on the engagement of their son, Jeremy Glick to Caryla Smigielski

The Washtenaw Jewish community sends mazal tovs to:

Gale Oren on the birth of her granddaughter, Miriam Yael, born Thursday, June 29th to Rachel and Gary Glick, on the engagement of their son, Jeremy Glick to Caryla Smigielski
David Uhlmann, on his nomination by President Biden for Assistant Administrator for Enforcement and Compliance Assurance at the Environmental Protection Agency
Rachel and Gary Glick, on the engagement of their son, Jeremy Glick to Caryla Smigielski

Advertisers

Alex Milshetyn, Real Estate..................................................3
Margolis Nursery.................................................................18
Ann Arbor District Library.....................................................18
Modern Mechanical.............................................................24
Apollo’s Troupe.................................................................31
Pam Sjo, The Reinhart Company.............................................9
Bank of Ann Arbor..............................................................15
Penny Seats Theatre Co.......................................................27
Bivosac.................................................................19, 31
People’s Food Co-op..........................................................2
Consultants in Opthalmic & Facial Plastic Surgery..................19
PTD.......................................................................................24
Hebrew Free Loan.................................................................11
R. D. Kleinschmidt.................................................................2
Giraffe Design Build.........................................................16, 17
Temple Beth Emeth..............................................................15
Holocaust Memorial Center....................................................19
University Musical Society....................................................30
Huron-Clinton Metroparks....................................................22
Wolverine Tax & Financial....................................................3
Hurwitz-Greene Real Estate..................................................15
Women of TBE.....................................................................18
Jewish Cultural Society.......................................................31
Wayne Potteries.................................................................31
Jewish Family Services.....................................................11, 22
Zingerman’s.................................................................29
Jewish Federation of Greater Ann Arbor..........................18

HAPPY NEW YEAR
from Zingerman’s Bakehouse!

Holiday Specials for Rosh Hashanah

buckwheat honeycake

Made with golden raisins, toasted almonds, fresh orange and lemon zest, cinnamon, cloves, ginger, nutmeg and a few secret ingredients.

Available at

Zingerman’s Bakehouse
531 Plaza Drive • Ann Arbor
zingermansbakehouse.com
734-761-2095

Zingerman’s Deli
422 Detroit St. • Ann Arbor
zingermansdeli.com
734-663-3354

Zingerman’s

A beautiful five-strand braided loaf brushed with honey and topped with magnanimous amounts of anise, poppy and sesame seeds.
November
Big Band Holidays
Jazz at Lincoln Center Orchestra
with Wynton Marsalis
Sun Nov 28 // Hill Auditorium

December
Takács Quartet with
Julien Labro, bandoneón
Fri Dec 3 // Rackham Auditorium

Handel’s Messiah
Sat-Sun Dec 4-5 // Hill Auditorium

January
A.I.M: Requiem:
Fire in the Air of the Earth
A new work by Kyle Abraham and Jlin
Fri-Sat Jan 7-8 // Power Center

Imani Winds and the Catalyst Quartet
Sat Jan 29 // Rackham Auditorium

Sphinx Symphony Orchestra
EXIGENCE
Tito Muñoz, conductor
Sun Jan 30 // Hill Auditorium

February
Ballet Folklórico de México de Amalia Hernández
Sun Feb 6 // Hill Auditorium

Night • Layl
A performance by Ali Chahrouh
Sat Feb 12 // Power Center

Fiddler on the Roof in Concert
With Orchestral Arrangements by John Williams
Grand Rapids Symphony
Andy Einhorn, music director and conductor
Matthew Ozawa, director
Sat-Sun Feb 19-20 // Hill Auditorium

March
The Philadelphia Orchestra
Yannick Nézet-Séguin, conductor and music director
Nathalie Stutzmann, principal guest conductor
Carol Jantsch, tuba
David Kim, violin
Fri-Sat Mar 11-12 // Hill Auditorium

National Arab Orchestra
Michael Iribrahim, conductor and oud
Abeer Nehme, vocals
Sat Mar 19 // Hill Auditorium

Octavio E. Butler’s Parable of the Sower
Creation, Music, and Lyrics by
Toshi Reagon and Bernice Johnson Reagon
Fri-Sat Mar 25-26 // Power Center

Benjamin Grosvenor, piano
Sun Mar 27 // Hill Auditorium

April
Swing Out
Caleb Teicher, choreographer
Eyal Vilner’s Big Band
Fri-Sat Apr 1-2 // Power Center

Sahra: An Evening of Performance
Tawil & Khoury
Tammy Lakris
Kabareh Cheikhats
Sat Apr 9 // Spot Lite (Detroit)

EDEN
Joyce DiDonato, mezzo-soprano
Il Pomo d’Oro
Thu Apr 14 // Hill Auditorium

Redman / Mehlidau / McBride / Blade
A MoodSwing Reunion
Thu Apr 21 // Hill Auditorium

HOME
Created by Geoff Sobelle
Fri-Sat, Apr 22-23 // Power Center

Sheku Kanneh-Mason, cello and Isata Kanneh-Mason, piano
Tue Apr 26 // Rackham Auditorium

For tickets call 734.764.2538 or visit ums.org

Just added!
Jonas Kaufmann in Recital
Tue Oct 12 // 7:30 pm
Hill Auditorium

Superstar German tenor Jonas Kaufmann is adored by opera lovers and makes his UMS debut as part of a rare US recital tour. Indisputably one of the greatest tenors in history, his sensational performances are lauded all over the world.
The Parliament of Poets
Celebrating
Our Common Humanity

Frederick Glaysher
Solo Performance - Apollo’s Troupe
A Universal Story of Human Aspiration

A Don Quixote-like character called to the moon by Apollo to consult on the meaning of modern life.
“Like a story around a campfire.”
—The Audience
“A man who has the gift of inner grace.”
—Robert Hayden

OUTDOORS — 90 minutes
West Park, in front of Band Shell
Saturdays, 7:00 pm, July 24, 31, August 7
Sundays, 2:00 pm, July 25, August 1, 8
FREE, Donations Appreciated
Per CDC, State of Michigan, Social Distance, Masks

www.Etsy.com/shop/zemyck

Zemyck
Stoneware and Porcelain Pottery
Pat Cowan

Zemyck
www.etsy.com/shop/zemyck

Celebrate the High Holidays with the Jewish Cultural Society
“Doing Jewish Differently” (especially this year)

Rosh Hashanah
and Tashlich

Followed by Kol Nidre, Yom Kippur
and Break-the-Fast
For dates & times: Jewishculturalsociety.org

Join us!

Bivouac
Since 1931
336 S. State Street, Ann Arbor, MI 48104 · 734.761.6207
WWW.BIVOUCANNARBOR.COM

Shop Local for
Back to School

NEW BACKPACK ARRIVALS FROM:

WE’VE GOT YOUR BACK!
Let’s Get Moving Again, Together!

TheRide welcomes all riders back as we return to full service levels beginning August 29.

- Get updated route and schedule information. Scan the QR code.
- Plan ahead using TheRide’s Plan My Trip tool.

We continue to follow COVID-19 safety precautions and remind all riders that masks are required by law until further notice.

Visit TheRide.org to stay up to date on all routes and schedules.